Skills

At Claremont Preparatory School, our teaching combines the best of tradition and innovation.

Students benefit from workshops in study skills and test taking, as well as a program of assessment and academic assistance based upon identification of individual learning styles. Claremont Prep strives to help children realize their potential and maximize school success.

We embrace technology as a tool for learning. Our school building is a wireless environment, with four computers in each classroom and additional laptops available on every floor. Our new library contains 20 computer carrels and smartboards. Digital kiosks throughout the school provide ready access to news and information.

Located in the heart of Lower Manhattan, financial capital of the world and New York's fastest growing residential neighborhood, Claremont Preparatory School offers a superior educational program to 1000 children ages 5 through 14 in a state-of-the-art facility. We are committed to providing our students with a strong foundation in academics, the arts and athletics and to preparing them to meet the challenges of high school, college and the global community.

What Happens After Southampton College Closes in 2005?

By Dan Rattiner

The announcement last week that Southampton College would be shutting down in September 2005 has utterly stunned this community. I cannot tell you how much of an impact this is going to have.

Although a small group of graduate students will remain, the vast majority of the student body, about 1,100 undergraduates, will not be returning. About 500 people will no longer be employed. This represents about 15% of the entire off-season population of this town.

There are two other factors. This college has been the single largest cultural factor in the community. Plays and lectures are given here. Conferences and concerts are held here. The Parrish Art Museum, a mainstay of downtown Southampton, recently announced that it would build a new and larger facility on the main quadrangle hard by the entrance to the college, while maintaining the smaller but historic facility downtown.

It is more than just a feather in the cap of any community to have a college in its midst. It crewe have a vibrant group of 1,100 young people, 18 to 21, to enliven the community in the off-season. This is not to mention the professors and instructors who live the life of the mind.

Personally, the announced closing of this college touches me in many ways. Dan's Papers, in partnership with the college, holds a small film festival at Duke Hall twice a year, in the spring and the fall. Students at the college have served as interns at our newspaper, gaining credits toward graduation over the years. For two years, I was an adjunct professor at the school, teaching creative journalistic writing one year, and marketing and advertising the other. The closing of the college will bring an end to the Writer's Book Fair to Benefit the John Steinbeck reading room at the college. And it will bring an end to the wonderful Writer's conference held there every sumates an exhilaration of intellectual ferment that is priceless without measure.

The second factor is the part the college plays in the patchwork of cultures that make up this community. We have Wall Street bankers and fishermen, tourists and native Americans, summerpeople and rock stars. And, with the college,

CORRECTION

An error appeared in our column "Real Estates" last week. We erroneously reported that the 82-acre Galluccio Family Wineries on the North Fork were for sale. They had been for sale earlier in the year for $7.5 million, but, according to Vince Galluccio, have now been withdrawn from the market.

mer, something that has great meaning to me.

I feel so sorry for so many people who have put so much time and energy and money into making the college a success. In particular, I feel bad for Robert F.X. Sillerman, the wealthy media executive who has donated tens of millions of dollars of his own money to the school and for the last seven years has served as Chancellor there.

And I feel particularly sorry for the students, who will now be offered an alternate education in Brookville far away, or just some help in finding someplace else to complete their education. This is, particularly for them, a gut wrenching experience. And even more so for the students who were so devoted to the school's award winning Marine Science Undergraduate Program.

I have no particularly bad feelings about Long Island University, which has announced that one of its three campuses, Southampton, will be closing for economic reasons. They have to do what they have to do.

But then, I recall that Long Island University, after founding this school 41 years ago, briefly abandoned it. The school has stood alone. And Long Island University is in no great financial shape anyway. Independent of them, there are those who know how to make the survival of this school happen. Below are the comments of three people who have intimate knowledge of different aspects of this situation.

Comments From JOHN KANAS

(Mr. Kanas is CEO and Chairman of North Fork Bank, and a member of the Board of Trustees, Long Island University. He is a graduate of Southampton College, Class of 68.)

Editor and Publisher Dan Rattiner: "I've heard that for several years, you have been in favor of closing down Southampton College."

John Kanas: "Not true. Three years ago, I saw they were running a version of a liberal arts college, and it wasn't working. It couldn't continue that way. It was draining too much money from the other two campuses. There had to be a change. And I said we ought to change the type of institution, change the type of curriculum to teach people how to work on Long Island, train people for jobs. Teachers, nurses, businesspeople, accountants. St. Josephs in Patchogue is very successful. Hofstra University, with its flaws, is successful.

"I think it's a very tough road to continue this school as a high brow, traditional residential college. There is a lot of competition in this area. And you know, they have this wonderful Marine Science Program as a major. Fulbright Scholars, even. But when you graduate from the school and it is ten years later, how much does a person with this major make — $50,000 a year? How does the alumni endow the college with graduate giving from this level? It can't be done.

"Bob Sillerman (the Chancellor) thought we ought to try his idea for a new curriculum. He proposed this novel interdisciplinary core curriculum, a team-taught course linked curriculum that would take advantage of Long Island's marine, environmental, literary and artistic community and require fewer teachers. And I have to hand it to him, he put his money where his mouth was. And so the board approved it, and it didn't work. It got worse.

"The management of the college came to us and they said the losses which were $7 million this year would rise to $10 to $12 million next year. And it put us in this very embarrassing position. We had this huge building program underway. The library already under construction.

"I was away in Europe on business when all this came down, and it had been my understanding that the board had decided to close the undergraduate school in September. But now they have delayed it a year. And this will give the college a considerable time to decide what to do.

"The buildings that are there now clearly are for an institution. It could be something else, I suppose. The choices are that the property could be sold, or a buyer could come in to make it another institute of higher learning. I have been urging the board to look into that. The school could be managed by another university. Or it could be a public college. We should talk to people in Albany and in Washington. And see if we can find a solution. There's a good shot that somebody could come in."

Comments From DR. DANIEL RODAS

(Dr. Rodas is the Provost of Southampton College.)

Reporter Clara Jablonski: "What happens next?"

Dr. Rodas: "The change is to better serve the educational needs of the students and faculty in a new location. The new program will continue, as a separate curriculum, but at our C. W. Post campus in Brookville an hour away. We will have housing for the students there for their first year there. Although housing at Brookville campus is limited, off-campus housing options are being explored. Students will still apply to Southampton College and receive their degrees from Long Island University at graduation.

"The graduate programs in English and Education offered at the college will keep the Southampton campus as their home in 2005-6. The writing program, which has included professors Roger Rosenblatt and Jules Feiffer, will remain on the Southampton campus. Long Island University Public Radio, WLIU, will stay broadcasting from Southampton as well. These programs do not require the same level of support services as the undergraduate programs.

"There have been discussions about the future of the marine facilities. We've talked to the Parrish Art Museum, who have leased nine acres of land from the college to create a privately-funded, state of the art facility, and discussions are continuing. We've also talked to the faculty. We want to work with the faculty and staff that will be affected by these changes, and we have invited the undergraduate faculty from Southampton to teach at the C. W. Post campus. We'll see what happens.

"My role is to support this transition and help the students with their needs. We had an open meeting with the students, with Charles Hitchcock, Dean of the College and Paul Forestell, the Faculty Chair, on June 17 at Duke Lecture Hall. The students voiced their concerns. We reassured them their financial aid awards would be preserved. In the first 24 hour period, the student reaction has been one of surprise and support for the college and each other. The overwhelming response of the students is 'how can I help.'

"There is a lot to do. We have started construction on the $10 million Bishop-Burke Library/Learning Center. The exterior will be completed, but the interior will remain incomplete for now. There were other projects in the building program, including a 65,000 square foot recreational center and new construction in the marine sciences department, and renovations for the dormitories and student union. These will be discontinued.

"And there are a lot of other things to deal with. There have been concerns raised in regards to the allocation of funds from the college's summer fundraisers. In the past, money raised at the All for the Sea benefits has always been used to provide scholarship support for the students. Funds from this year's All for the Sea '04 Rod Stewart concert will be used for the students.

"The unfortunate reality is that it is expensive to run a quality institution. This is a private tuition-dependent college, not a state-run university, and like other institutions, there is an increase in cost over time. The College has continued to utilize resources wisely and prudently, and this is no fault of anyone's."

Comments From TIM BISHOP(D-NY)

(Tim Bishop was for many years the Provost of Southampton College. He is currently the Congressman in Washington from this district.)

Dan Rattiner: "Do you recall the Montauk Ocean Science Lab? It was in business on Fort Pond Bay for about ten years in the 1980s in that town. A consortium of colleges sent students there to do research. Have you thought of the Lab, or something like it, which I believe had federal funding, in connection with

So I Married Him

Winner Of The Best Tale Told Award At The Antique Car Show

By Dan Rattiner

Last weekend was the Concours d'Elegance, held on Sayre Field in Bridgehampton. People who don't know about the event wonder what it is. It's a two day display and auction of about 200 antique automobiles, from 1906 Stanley Steamers, to 1930 Cadillacs, to 1954 Corvettes and Jaguars from all over the country, all lined up in pretty little rows. On the first day, Saturday, they are on display for inspection. On the second day, Sunday, there is the auction. On both days, the owners of the cars hover around them, polishing them, explaining this gauge or that lever to the spectators who wander by. And at the end of everything, trophies are given out to the best in show. My job, as it has been for a half dozen years or more, is to make an award for THE BEST STORY TOLD TO ME BY A CAR OWNER ON SUNDAY MORNING. This means I get to the Concours around 10 a.m., spend two hours going from car to car asking owners to tell me an interesting story, then choose a winner.

I will get to the winner at the end of this article. But first, let me tell you some of the stories I heard that were pretty good but didn't quite make it.

Dick Vecchiarelli of Springfield, Massachusetts, stood by his tiny 1961 BMW racing car with the black stripes on the sides and explained the scribbled autograph on the back hood to me.

"That's the signature of Hans Stuck, Jr.," he said. "His dad had designed and built this car in Germany, and I met his son at the BMW factory in Greenville, South Carolina. He looked over the car from stem to stern. 'It's supposed to have two hood latches,' he said, and he pointed at the two latches in a photograph of the car leading the pack over a dirt track somewhere. I had found only one for the front hood. 'But it's close enough,' he said. His signature verified

"The car was built to win all races in its class, the under 900 cc class, at the time. It really was a superior automobile. But if Hans Stuck Sr. won some of them, it was his son who signed this, that ran it like a maniac. He slid through turns so fast, it was said, that when the race had ended you found the dead flies on the driver's door, not on the windshield. He'd got 'em broadside.

"In one of the photographs, there was this object, I thought it was a heat manifold, at the base of the stick shift, and it was covered with white adhesive tape. When I rebuilt the car, I decided to mount the manifold under the dashboard. It got very hot when you drove it. I showed him where I put it.

"We put tape on that so we wouldn't burn ourselves when we shifted," Hans told me. "We never thought to put it up there out of the way. Much better."

I liked this story. But I thought it was too technical for first prize. Then I met Peter Giano of Harrison, New York, who had flat bedded this gorgeous powder blue 1960 Chevy Impala down from his home upstate. Why hadn't he simply driven it down?

"I was worried it would break down if I drove it this far," he said. "And I was right. We had the flat bed bring it. But it couldn't get it the last ten feet into this line of cars. We tried to drive it the ten feet. It started up, moved about a foot, and then coughed and died. It's dead here."

"How'd you get it into line?" I asked.

"We pushed it," he said.

Rudy Albrecht of Huntington, Long Island, was worried about his wife.

He had a blue 1954 Mercedes 220a Cabriolet convertible at the show and he wanted to make a quick sale of it.

"I bought it on E-Bay 48 hours ago," he said. "I saw it there with just a few hours to go and it was going so cheap. I collect 220s. I have three. I was down in Virginia and this one was in Tennessee. I phoned my wife and told her I might buy it. We only have a garage big enough for three 220s. 'If you two come home one has to go,' she said. You choose."

"What did you do?" I asked.

"Well, I haven't been home yet and here it is," he said. "I put it in my wife's name. If it doesn't get sold, I go home with it and when she glares at me I hand her the keys. 'It's yours' I tell her."

Doug McCormick of Southampton and Manhattan stood beside his 1939 LaSalle. He's owned it 34 years. It is not for sale.

"I was living in Los Angeles in 1971 working as a TV account executive," he said, "and it was the morning after a high stakes poker game where I cleaned up. We played about one game a month.

I'd never won before, but now I had more money than I expected. So I bought this. I bought it from a guy who provided all the cars for the Godfather movies. He said Glen Ford had owned it. I thought some day I'd have a kid and I'd give it to him to take to the prom. So one day recently, I have this kid and I want to give it to him to take to the prom and he wants to rent a limo for him and his friends for the night. So much for that idea."

Howard Kroplick of East Hills, Long Island, had a 1966 Ford Mustang GT 350H at the show. Joe wore a Hertz Rent-a-Car shirt. And he explained that the H was for Hertz.

"Hertz got this idea in 1965 that a good promotion would be something they would call 'rent-a-racer.' They thought businessmen would like this. They'd have Carroll Shelby, the car designer, design this special model of the Mustang, just for Hertz, and they'd have it on the lot and if you wanted to you could rent one and roar around town with it. It's a very special and very fast car. The promotion lasted for just six months because it was a sort of disaster, though it did create quite a stir in the rent-a-car industry.

"The way it worked was you'd go to a rental car counter and to qualify you had to be 25 years old or older and you'd have to join the Hertz Sports Club. They'd give you a card. To get the card, you had to successfully take the car once around the parking lot. Then you were an official racer. Unfortunately, the car was hardly ever rented by businessmen. Instead they were rented by hot rodders who, often as not, returned them all banged up. They built about 1,000 for Hertz before the promotion stopped, 2,000 overall. I saw a picture of this at a Christie's auction catalogue and it reminded me of my first car, which was a Mustang, and how I wished I never sold it. So I bid on it by phone, and here it is."

The best story told to me that morning, however, was from Joan Wolf, who now lives in Carlisle, Pennsylvania. She was standing next to a forest green 1954 Jaguar XK-120 with fender skirts. A gorgeous car.

"I was born and raised one of 5 kids in York, Pennsylvania," she told me. "My brother and I are Irish twins. My parents were divorced. My dad moved to New York City."

"What are Irish twins?" I asked.

"Two kids who are born less than a year apart."

"Oh."

"Anyway, one day when I was about fifteen, my mom calls my dad in Manhattan and says 'I've got five kids, I need a second car. He says, 'I get the picture.' The next day he calls back and says a friend of his had bought this car, but at the last minute ran out of money to buy it so he could sell it, and so he bought it. He gave my mom an address in Yonkers, and told her to drive her car with my older brother and me and we could meet him there and pick it up and drive it back to Pennsylvania. So we went.

"Challenging" Course Proves Too Hard For This Country's Best Golfers

By Dan Rattiner

If Tiger Woods was going to make one of his famous charges to steal away the U. S. Open championship at the last minute, it would have started on Saturday afternoon, the last half of the third day of this four day event. He was six shots off the pace as he teed off on the 10th hole. Usually, he would be a bit closer than this by this time. But historically, this man, who is considered the greatest golfer of all time, hangs back in the early going. And then rushes forward with a series of amazingly accurate shots that leave his many competitors shaking their heads. He wins going away on Sunday afternoon.

To see if he would make this charge — and he hadn't done so in seven consecutive major tournaments — what had gone wrong? — we established ourselves in the grandstands alongside the 13th green. Tiger was starting the 11th hole at that time, and we hadn't checked in on him since he putted out at the ninth green one over par and six shots behind. But the thing to do, considering that there is a virtual army of spectators that follow him around the course from hole to hole, is get ahead of him where there aren't so many people and wait for him to catch up.

Off in the distance, 370 yards from the green, you can see the tee box for this hole. It's a fairly straight hole, and it's a par four. The experts, when they laid out this hole, set it up so that

HOW NOT TO TREAT THE SHINNECOCK NATION

By Dan Rattiner

During the planning stages of the U.S. Open, the United States Golf Association (USGA) showed almost no sensitivity concerning the longstanding relationship between the Shinnecock Hills Golf Club and the Shinnecock Indian Nation, who live on their reservation only a short walk away.

The golf course was built by Shinnecock laborers 114 years ago. A full-blooded Shinnecock, Oscar Bunn, and a half-Shinnecock John Shippen competed in the second U. S. Open held at this links in 1896 and after the first round, Shippen was actually in second place. Both were 21 years old, caddies at the club, and the club urged them to compete, because they were both excellent golfers. To that effect, the club, along with the organizers of the event, the precursors of the USGA, stood up to some European golfers who said they would boycott the event if the Shinnecoeks were allowed to play. They played. There was no boycott.

After that time, right up until this day, Shinnecoeks have been caddies, groundskeepers and landscapers for the club. During the three previous U. S. Opens at Shinnecock, they've always had paying jobs to do, and in fact, in 1996 the whole tribe handled the car parking. Keep in mind that the club is not only named after the Shinnecoeks, but its logo (and consequently the logo of the 104th U. S. Open), consists of a portrait of a Shinnecock Indian between crossed golf clubs.

This time, the USGA treated the Shinnecoeks in a way that was both insulting and demeaning. There is no excuse for it.

The old car parking contract, worth about $50,000 to this impoverished tribe, was ignored. Instead, nearby fields were rented for par for this hole could be achieved by hitting a drive from the tee maybe 230 yards down the fairway toward the green, chipping your second shot over a sand trap to the green, then taking two putts to get down. There are many very difficult holes on this course. This is not one of them.

In the stands there, waiting for Tiger, we got to watch some of the other golfers ahead of him play this hole. We also got to watch the goings on in the stands itself. It was not a big grandstand. It was about twenty rows from front to back, and all together it could accommodate no more than 150 people. It was also elevated. That is to say the first row, facing a railing, was already up about eight feet. A flight of stairs led up to it along one side, with ushers who led people to the seats as they came open, and monitored the comings and goings and the behavior of those attending.

It was a middle-aged crowd, middle class, it seemed to me, with t-shirts that read ATLANTIC CITY, and people eating ice cream cones and people wearing baseball caps. The talk in the stands, of course, was about golf. Who was ahead, by how much, and when was Tiger coming. It was also hot as hell. No shade. No wind. A blazing sun.

For the most part, the golfers hitting off the tee wound up hitting their drives about 250 yards, not 230 yards, and they would wind up just before the furthest of two traps that guarded the green. They'd walk up the fairway, these golfers, two at a time, accompanied by their caddies, various officials, various network

TV people, attendants who looked like Roman gladiators carrying big signs with the names of the two golfers on them and how far above or below par they were and all these people would stop by the balls and survey the scene. After a bit, and a bit of consulting between the golfers and their caddies, the golfers would hit onto the green and putt out.

Because the signs indicated who the pair of golfers were, and because we had in the stands with us leaflets of the order the golfers would be playing, we could count down until Tiger would be coming through. Bo Van Pelt of Bixby, Oklahoma came through with Scott Verplank of Edmond, Oklahoma. Steve Flesch of Union, Kentucky came through with Stephen Leaney of Australia. Now there was just one twosome before Tiger.

At this point, a murmur went through the crowd in our grandstand and there were people pointing at something out on the fairway. They were pointing at a ball.

Someone, off the tee, had hit a ball almost to the green. This was by far the longest drive anybody had hit that we had seen. It had gone probably 320 yards — a tremendous shot. And the pair of golfers, one of whom had obviously hit this, together with their entourage, was now walking slowly up the fairway.

These two were Lee Janzen of Orlando, Florida and Spencer Levin of Elk Grove, California. And after Levin's name in our leaflets was the letter "a." In this field of 66 golfers, he was only one of three who had made the cut as an amateur. And we were soon able to see that it was his ball that had almost reached the green.

Janzen, arriving at his ball, hit first, and arched it onto the green about ten feet from the pin. Now Levin walked up to his ball, which would be an easy pitch. Unlike the other golfers who were dressed in starched white linens or freshly pressed golfing shirts and shorts, he wore a rumpled grey shirt and pants. He looked to be about 17. And so he arrived at his ball, and he hit it a miserably short distance, maybe just halfway, leaving himself at the very edge of the green with about a twenty five foot putt. His next putt went only eight feet, leaving himself twelve feet. And he missed that. He wound up with a one over par 5. Oh, if only this fellow could figure out his short game.

According to the sign, both Levin and Janzen had arrived at this hole one over par for the tournament, which was the same score that Tiger Woods was to that point. I noticed on our

Another Study

Somebody Should Order A Study Of Why We Have All These Studies

By Dan Rattiner

I have often wondered about all the studies done by our towns out here. They pay out millions of dollars to hire experts to study subsidized housing, public transportation, the road system, parking. These are largely unsolvable problems, but there are people on one side of the issue and people on the other side of the issue and so these outsiders are hired to do a "study" and then, whatever is in the 200 pages or 800 pages or whatever, is carefully read by each side and used by one or the other of the sides as ammunition to make their case more forcefully. Nothing usually comes of any of this, except the people who make the studies get richer.

About four years ago, a man in Southampton was hired to do a "transportation study" and after two years during which time they paid him about $150,000 he came back with nothing. They asked him about this and he said just give me six more months, so they paid him another $50,000 and when he didn't produce from that either, they leaned on him very hard, at which point he replied, "these things take time," after which they paid him still more money, until ultimately he produced a totally useless document. It involved no parking anywhere on the east end, bicycles left around for anybody to use, trolleys on the railroad tracks and the usual other suspects.

Maybe they need a page turner, like they have for piano players at concerts.

"We were hoping he'd come up with some ideas we could actually USE," a councilman said ruefully when they paid him still more money at the end.

In any case, since then, there have been more studies and more studies and then last week Southampton Town approved what I consider the granddaddy of them all. They are going to make a study of the raises they are giving their employees. Are they giving too few? Too many? Are the raises too little? Too much? They are paying some firm $100,000 to complete this study.

This is going to make the 749 employees of the town crazy. Surely, somebody has recently gone in to see the Mayor, hat in hand, to be told a raise was not in the cards this particular time because they were hard up for money.

IF YOU DIVIDED UP THE $100,000 BY 749, YOU COULD GIVE US EACH A $133 BONUS!!!!

I expect to see crowds of town employees outside town hall, marching and picketing, threatening to break the door down and go in there and do something about all this.

I also have a hard time figuring out exactly what the firm they are hiring is going to do for this money. I suppose they could start by looking at the current pay of every job in town and comparing it to the current pay of every job in another town, or maybe ten other towns. They could do this with a bunch of phone calls and some return faxes and maybe an hour's worth of fiddling with a calculator.

Then they might do the same thing with the numbers from five years ago and compare that to a bunch of other towns of almost the same size, and using a calculator, figure the percentage of increase the town gave in raises for the employees that stuck around. Maybe another hour fiddling with a calculator.

I figure two days work by two people. Sound about right? But maybe I'm leaving some things out that go on at the offices of this firm they have hired. Maybe they need a page turner, like they have for piano players at concerts. Expert finishes reading a page. Has to have it turned to the next page. Then maybe there is the big printing house they have in the back, where they have this entire staff sitting around playing checkers until one of the people in the front comes back there to say they need 100 copies of the study printed up. That could be a big expense. Then there are the people who take dictation, the typists, the sales force, the people who play video games, the people who send away to get degrees from the internet so they can be experts.

Of course, there are the parties, the dancing girls, the vacations in Hawaii, the cruises, the flying off to seminars in Las Vegas to hone your skills on how to make a study. And everybody's birthday has to be celebrated. That costs.

What will the towns dream up next? • special parking lots. But the Shinnecock fields were not. As for hiring the Shinnecoeks for other purposes, they were simply passed over.

After the Shinnecoeks discussed this among themselves, they began to talk about holding a demonstration in front of the Open. Immediately, the USGA decided that the Open could sponsor a "Kids Golf Day" for the Shinnecock Indian children after the Open was over, but in Riverhead, at a course ten miles away, not at the Shinnecock Golf Links. They also decided they would do something else with the Shinnecoeks but they weren't quite sure what. Nothing came of that promise. But then at the last minute, Dennis Suskind of Southampton Town and George Guldi, of the Suffolk County Legislature stepped in, and just three weeks before the Open, made arrangements with some corporate sponsors for corporate hospitality tents to be set up on the reservation, two on the Pow Wow Grounds and one on the ball field. So finally, revenue came in that way.

During the time when it appeared that the USGA and the Shinnecoeks might be working more harmoniously together, the Shinnecoeks got this wonderful idea to hold a brief ceremony consecrating the ground of the Open. It would take ten minutes. An ancient tribal blessing would be offered. A song honoring those at the club would be sung. And it would be done to the memory of Pete Smith, the longtime Shinnecock groundskeeper at the club, who died in 2002. Many Indian artifacts have been found in and around Shinnecock. Many Indians were buried in and around Shinnecock. The Shinnecoeks presented this

How To Keep your Brain From — What Was I Talking About?

By Dan Rattiner

The other evening, just after 11 p.m., I couldn't find my cell phone. I was in the living room at the time. And so I thought, I know, I'll dial its number on the house phone. I'll hear it and that's where it'll be.

So I punched in the number, listened carefully and there it was, ringing in the study. I ran in. Picked it up, put it to my ear and listened. Nobody was there. Who could be calling me at this hour?

I have a theory about how we remember things, or whether we remember things. And I think it is a lesson I have learned from my cell phone. When I bought it, I was told that it had an address book, and it could store, probably, fifty names.

"Depends on how much you type in for each entry," the salesman told me. "Alexander Hossenneffer takes up a lot more room than Sam Cox. But fifty is about right."

One day, when I had made perhaps my sixtieth new entry into the address book, I discovered that one of the old entries had been automatically deleted. Another entry was only partially intact. Hmmm, I thought. I guess that's about all that fits in there. And so I did a little editing and removed a few older numbers to when you think happy thoughts, it lights up another. They can see this on cat scans.

The hope is, of course, that someday soon we can find a cure for diseases of the brain, mental retardation and Alzheimer's disease. Also there are a battery of people simply studying memory loss, even normal memory loss. Is there anything we can do to sharpen our memories? Keep the things we have learned in there, stored away safely wherever it is that our synapses have put them? What about those people, like me, who, when they walk across a room full of purpose, get to the other side and can't remember why it was they went?

My theory is that the answer to this is capacity. Like my cell phone, there is only so much you can put in there. And when you put more in, something you hadn't intended leaks out.

"Oh, I have such a vivid memory of, uh, what was her name? How could I forget her name?"

The way to deal with this, obviously, is to begin, at the age of thirty five, to start limiting your memories.

make way for some newer ones. We sort of worked it out, the phone and I.

A lot of work is being done these days on how the brain works. We've been making a lot of progress, the scientists say. But it seems like all they really know is that when you think sad thoughts, it lights up one part of the brain and

Never Mind (continued from previous page)

How many times have you heard somebody say that?

The stuff just leaks out. For example, the name of the King of Serbia in 1912. One day it's there and if somebody asks you, you can tell them, the next day it's gone forever. There's the proof.

If my theory is correct, then, like with my cell phone, the memories you piled in — your first day in kindergarten, your first love, the day you hit the home run in Little League, the sonnet you memorized in college — will fill you to capacity. And then randomly, the brain will start throwing things out. Based on my observations, I think this probably happens at about age thirty five. After that, put things in your noodle at your peril.

The way to deal with this, obviously, is to begin, at the age of thirty five, to start limiting your memories. Stay quiet and still. Keep the shades down and the lights off. Spend as much of your time as possible thinking about absolutely nothing. And then, when you do have an experience you expect you will want to keep as a memory, wake up to it and experience it to its fullest, but try to limit its complexity. Memories, like Sam Cox or Alexander Hossenfeffer, take up varying amounts of space in your brain. Have the goal be short, intense yet simple experiences. Then shut down and try not to think of anything again. This way you minimize the use of your memory cells. But you maximize the quality of your life. And you can remember everything.

It's a lot like yoga, or any of the eastern disciplines that clear your mind. Think of nothing. Breathe in. Breathe out. Ever notice how the people who master this stuff tend to have long, long lives? Or if they have short lives, tend to, at the end, remember most everything in them?

I'm going to write a book about this discipline. I am going to dictate a set of tapes you can buy explaining this. I want to share it with the world.

Listen to my tapes. Read my book, eat plenty of carrots, take Ginkgo memory pills and spend a lot of time lying down with a felt cloth over your eyes that you can buy from me. I will call it the Rattiner Memory Capacity Method.

But the hard part, for me anyway, is that if I work up all the nuances and rules and regulations and edges of this thing, I will have sacrificed myself because there will be so much to remember, all other stuff will slip out. And I can't do that.

And so, I am going to hire a staff of followers and students to learn this and do this for me. We'll hold seminars, group sessions, one on one. And I'll be the founder, the man in the background lying down with the black felt over his eyes to preserve his existing memories.

What the hell was I talking about?

Citizens Pledge $18,400 At Fundraiser To Restore Movie Sign

By Emily Weitz

The Long Wharf was cloaked in mist as I hurried from my car to the restaurant JLX on Main Street in Sag Harbor. When I arrived at the entrance, sandals squishing from the rain, it loomed before me. A few rusty old letters huddled together on the pavement: SAG. The neon that had run through each letter like a vein was severed. The paint was chipping, the bases were rotting away. And saddest of all, these once proud, famed letters were lying on the wet ground, just a few storefronts from their rightful place on the face of the Sag Harbor Cinema where they had hung for more than seventy years.

But this rainy sight was no cause for sadness. This was no funeral. This was a revival effort, and I stepped through the doorway to a restaurant full of chattering people celebrating the glory of a combination of letters that had come to hold a lot more meaning. These hunks of metal had become a relic that people were not willing to let go of — people were ready to fight for the survival of this sign.

The first person to strap on her armor was Brenda Siemer, who was there the fateful day in mid-May when the sign was taken down. Since then, she has enlisted the help of a community that has risen behind her. After a lot of

Southampton College?"

Tim Bishop: "I hadn't thought about it, but it's certainly something worth pursuing. Concerning federal funding, there is no money that could be made available in the short term for an extension of the Southampton Marine Science program or any Oceanographic program. And even in the longer term it is a long shot. Mostly, the federal government provides student financial assistance. And at the present time, we're voting appropriations on fiscal 2006. That's how far ahead we work. On the other hand, when I first got to Washington, I was able to get an appropriation of about $330,000 for the Marine Science Program so they could buy a new boat.

"At this moment, however, what really is on my mind is the Marine Science program and the future of that curriculum. Losing this program borders on the tragic. It is just so first rate. Here's a program that is absolutely unique in the country. Others like it are set in a research university environment. Here's one that is set in a small liberal arts college environment. The degree, a B. S. in Marine Science with a concentration in Marine Biology, Oceanography, Marine Vertebrate Biology or Marine Chemistry is the equivalent of a double major with a minor. An amazing number of students have gone on to grad school receiving assistantships and fellowships. An amazing number have received Fulbrights.

"Keep in mind I have been away from the college now for 28 months, so I am not in immediate touch with what is going on, although I certainly care about what is going on. I've been consumed with what I've been doing here in Congress.

"My understanding of the Board's decision to shut down the Undergraduate school is that it was done because it became clear there would be a significant drop in enrollment for the year 2005.

"Keep in mind that the school has always had a fundamental problem in that there have not been, up until now, physical facilities appropriate for the student body. This has not helped students and parents in deciding whether to come here or not. Finally Chancellor Hall, the new lecture hall, was built in 1998. And now there is the big library under construction.

"Everyone had high hopes for the new curriculum that was scheduled to begin in the fall of 2004. And now they cut it all off before this remedy of the income shortfall can even be put into place. And that's what happened." • work, a lot of discussions, a lot of debates, and a lot of determination, the benefit on Thursday, June 17 came together.

The benefit was $150 per person and there were about 150 people in the room. Ed Kleefield, owner of Jean Luc East and the brand new J LX, opened his restaurant to the evening, and 100% of the proceeds were donated to the renovation of the sign. The food was fantastic, from the shrimp and vegetable spring rolls to the tender salmon. The mojitos were flowing with the conversation. Prints of the sign in its glory, both glowing neon at night and contrasting red against its white backdrop during the day, hung on the walls. After a humorous and heartfelt speech by co-host Brenda Siemer, her husband, actor Roy Scheider, auctioned off the paintings. They had been donated to the cause by painter Curt Hoppe, and the two prints together raised $5000 towards the restoration.

Suffolk County Legislator Jay Schneiderman was on hand, and when I asked him what he thought of the whole community effort, he smiled. "It's fun to be fighting for a neon sign when all these towns are now trying to keep neon signs out," he said. He was referring, of course, to the irony of the fact that today a sign like our beloved SAG HARBOR art deco sign would not be permitted by law, because neon is against town codes. Schneiderman also remarked that it does show "how much people care about the ambience of Sag Harbor."

The "Save The Sign" benefit was the culmination of a 6-week effort by this community to maintain a part of the essence of this town. After such a successful evening, the people of Sag Harbor should be well on their way to achieving their goal. It is a demonstration of the fact that if we act on our beliefs, sometimes we can actually have a voice. This is one time when one woman shouted "No!" and a community heard her. This evening was a major step in the long journey towards her goal, a goal that now belongs to a community unified under one sign.

Suppose you were about to meet with a Hamptons model who also rides and trains polo ponies. You would be expecting gorgeous, fit and self-absorbed. You'd be right about gorgeous and fit. You'd be wrong about self-absorbed. She's a real person with real challenges and real success. And a successful businesswoman who has opened the first Hamptons-based modeling agency.

Allison "Allie" Thompson grew up in Levittown, New York, the daughter of Edward and Anita Thompson. Her father was in construction and her mother was a medical administrator. It was a great place to grow up, she said. She was the cheerleader with the football player boyfriend. She was shy and had no thoughts of ever becoming a model.

Instead, Allie dreamed of being an artist, a painter. So, out she came to Southampton College to study painting. She graduated with a fine arts degree and a love of the Hamptons. Then to the world of work, the not so glamorous world of her father's construction business.

While working on a charity event, as a pure fluke she entered a beauty pageant. She won. Next stop, the Miss Long Island contest of 1990. Again she won. Allie was approached by Joan Murray, a modeling agent who wanted to represent her.

Here the story takes an unexpected turn. Just days before the Miss Long Island pageant, Allie was diagnosed with multiple sclerosis (MS), a disease of the nervous system. It usually causes sudden neurologic symptoms including vision loss, paralysis, numbness, and walking difficulties. She cried for three days.

Then she read everything available about MS and said NO. She wasn't going to succumb to the images of wheelchairs and being bedridden. She was going to learn how to live successfully with it. She revealed her condition to Joan Murray, the agent, who still wanted to represent her. In one of those fortuitous coincidences that some call divine intervention, Joan was on the board of the Long Island Chapter of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society.

Allie took a then very bold step. Just one week after being named Miss Long Island, she went public with her MS. Some potential clients resisted booking a model in her "condition." But she kept at it. She still works with some of the clients who gave her at chance in the early days.

Where did she discover the strength and determination to fight the disease and become established in her new profession? She credits her parents, her doctors, and horses. Horses?

As a kid, she spent summers at her grandparents' home with her cousins at a lake in Connecticut and learned how to ride. She loved it. She started riding again in her twenties because of modeling.

Why the Hamptons? For starters, the action is here, certainly in the summer but year round as well.

One summer she was out here working for Gottex. During the down time so common to modeling she started riding and training horses. It was great exercise and even greater healing. She partially credits the adrenaline rush that comes with riding for helping her keep a positive and healthy attitude. Just being around horses has a very positive affect for people with MS and other illnesses.

At one time, Allie trained polo ponies and her circle of friends would get together for backyard polo matches. She was one of the few, and often the only, girls at these gatherings.

She can see the wonderful influence horses have on others as well. Allie loves to introduce children to riding. When shy, awkward children discover they can be comfortable on a horse and control this seemingly huge animal, their self-confidence grows and grows.

These days Allie is making the transition from successful model to successful businesswoman. She has formed Hampton Models and Talent with a roster of top-flight models and talent with offices in Westhampton Beach.

Hampton Models & Talent is an outgrowth of Jennifer Models, the well-known agency considered to be "the" agency on Long Island owned by Jennifer Hoffman. According to Allie, Jennifer was a great agent and loved by those who worked with her. Allie worked with Ms. Hoffman for 12 years until Jennifer's retirement. Now that Allie has acquired the agency, she has renamed it and relocated to Westhampton Beach.

Why not New York, or at least closer to the action? Why the Hamptons? For starters, the action is here, certainly in the summer but year round as well. Seventh Avenue moves east in the summer. Numerous photographers and production companies have been established out here, too. Allie is receiving plenty of feedback about how happy clients and potential clients are that there is now an agency in the neighborhood.

Allie knows the modeling and talent business from both sides. First, as a model who ran her career as a business. Now, as the entrepreneur and agent. She comes by her business skills honestly. Her father owned a successful construction company and her mother has built up Cardiovascular Medical Associates from herself and one physician to close to thirty doctors plus associated staff.

Allie's vision for Hampton Models and Talent is to be successful in the tri-state area.

Knowing the business from both sides as model and now agent, she brings honesty, integrity and incredible energy to the table. She still works closely with some of the first companies who hired her.

By knowing her clients' needs and each of her models, Allie is able to know where the best fit is. This saves everyone time and frustration. Instead of sending everyone to a casting or "go see," Allie sends just those closest to the look needed. The clients then don't have to look through an endless array of talent. The models go to jobs where there's a reasonable expectation of being selected and are subjected to fewer demoralizing rejections.

One of the innovations of Hampton Models & Talent is the web site being developed for Allie by Carmine Calabro, head of Group 7 Inc. Most agencies provide their clients with a static bound book, multiple headshots and specialties of their models. The long lead time for producing one of these books can render them out of date as soon as new model signs on or an existing model changes a look or hairstyle. Carmine is addressing this problem by developing a digital online book for Hampton Models & Talent complete with digital printing on demand. This book will always be current as new tear sheets can be added as soon as they run. New head shots are inserted or old ones deleted quickly.

More importantly, clients will be able to query to find the perfect model for an assignment. Need someone under 5' 5"? Need a 6' blonde with green eyes? Just select the criteria. The query results will include all models that meet the criteria with links to their data. It couldn't be easier or more helpful to clients.

Her approach to working with the models and their families also sets her apart. She wants to help young people avoid the traps of the modeling business. Many kids who want to be models see easy money, and believe that all you have to do is look pretty and stand there. But in reality, it isn't like that at all. The money may seem easy at the start, but after a few years, jobs may be harder to find, and like others in "glamorous" professions, models can end up out of work with nothing to fall back on. So Allie works with both the models and their parents to help them have a realistic idea of the expectations, and the work involved. When evaluating a new model's application, Allie wants to know their educational background and what their educational goals are, believing the importance of having well-rounded interests and aspirations.

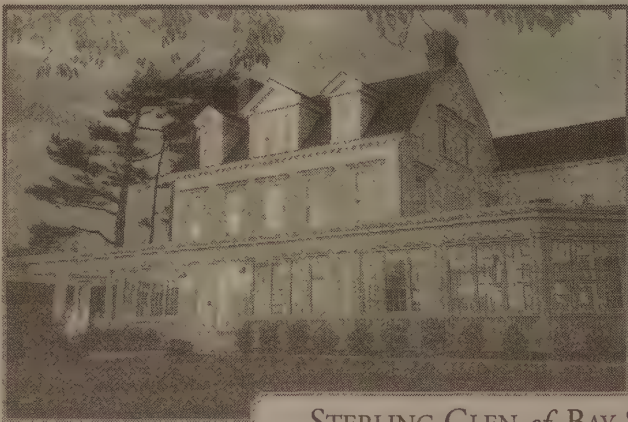

Also setting her apart is her commitment to encouraging a healthy attitude toward weight and fitness. In her view, a model can be slender without being anorexic. Allie is a strong believer in a healthy mind in a healthy body. It goes without saying that Allie learned the importance of both in dealing with her MS.

These days, Allie divides her time between Smithtown and a place in the Town of Southampton. Life in Smithtown is "Mommyhood" where she has a beautiful home with her eight-year-old daughter. They have a barn and a chicken coop and lots of space. They spend a great deal of time out here, and when the horses come along she refers to it as their time-share. How does she balance it all?

With great friends, family and support, according to Allie. She also has an incredibly positive attitude. Her glass is always at least half full and is sometimes even overflowing. She loves her work but the best part is just being "Mommy".

She must be doing something right. At her last checkup, her doctor said, "whatever you're doing, it works. I'd like to bottle it for my other patients."

Subject: I still hear that annoying voice in my sleep sometimes

Monday, June 21, 2004 at 9:36 a.m. EST

Good Morning.

When the movie first opened everything was okay. I did wonder though, had they paid for that title? I never much liked the corporation, but the film was charming enough. But then it was ubiquitous. I closed my eyes and I'd still see the silly little mailbox with the jagged pixilated envelope sticking out. I closed my ears, as far as they are possible to close, and I heard it. I heard it in my sleep. A tone, maybe some would call it a ding, followed by a deep sonorous, yet chirpy voice. Clearly it's been digitally manipulated. I still hear it sometimes. I don't blame you exactly. I don't blame Tom Hanks or Meg Ryan, either (although I do blame Tom Hanks for Forrest Gump). Your film was as lauded as it was endearing, so I don't blame the film, even. It's because it played in theaters seemingly forever, and then cable, and then Saturday afternoon on television. An unstoppable juggernaut. And now, sometimes I'll hear that noise, the ding, from across the room, or from down the hall, and I'll think of you. I don't hold a grudge though. I'm sending you the unexpurgated version of the latest "Neighbor" piece in Dan's Paper, and when you read it, you'll see it's true that I don't blame you. Maybe though, maybe you'll hear that dreadful, accursed noise when it gets to your inbox.

If acerbic wit tempered by sentimentalism could be bottled and spritzed from an atomizer, it might be called Eau d'Ephron. Nora Ephron has specialized in (and excelled at) the usually saccharine world of the romantic comedy. Beginning with the blockbuster When Harry Met Sally in 1989, for which she received an Academy Award nomination for best screenplay, Ephron has had a string of similar audience pleasing and acclaimed films (some of them didn't even have Meg Ryan in them). Her great achievement in Hollywood, and what has made her an A-List screenwriter is that she is never mawkish, yet always able to avoid cynicism.

Nora Ephron Writer/Director

Ephron and Peliggi were once named one of the most gracious hosts in the Hamptons by New York magazine.

Nora Ephron was a member of the Beverly Hills High class of '58, and graduated from Wellesley in 1962 with a degree in journalism knowing that she was a writer. She left school and immediately switched coasts, with a job as a reporter for the New York Post, once a fertile breeding ground for talented young writers. An illustrious career in journalism followed. Ephron wrote a column on women for Esquire magazine at the height of the feminist movement, and has written in The New Yorker, The New York Times and been a contributing editor at New York. She also wrote in some publications that didn't have New York in the title. By the mid-seventies she was among the most well known journalists in the country. A collection of her essays, Crazy Salad, has been reprinted often and is still popular. She became disillusioned with what she viewed as declining standards in journalism, and the cult of celebrity and self-aggrandizing surrounding journalists. She was sick, she said, of how every piece of journalism had become a personal essay. New journalism and Gonzo journalism had hijacked new writing. In 1977 in the afterword to Scribble, Scribble, her last collection of essays, Ephron wrote, "I am tired of the first person singular pronoun." And with that, she seemed to be done with journalism.

Ephron gave it up for the family business. She is the daughter of the famous screenwriting team, Phoebe and Henry Ephron who wrote classic screenplays such as, There's No Business Like Show Business, What Price Glory and Desk Set.

She has collaborated with sisters Amy and Delia, most notably with the latter on Mixed Nuts featuring Steve Martin as a suicide hotline operator and Hanging Up, which was based on Delia's novel of the same name. She had early success with Silkwood, the first big screenplay she wrote, which was nominated for an Academy award in 1983.

Ephron, who has a house in East Hampton, lives full-time on the Upper West Side with husband Nicholas Pileggi, author of the book Wiseguys and the screenplay for Goodfellas, which was based on his book. She has been married twice before, with the break-up with husband Carl Bernstein (of Woodward and Bernstein) purported to have been the basis of Ephron's novel Heartburn (and the movie after it in 1987).

Ephron and Peliggi were once named one of the most gracious hosts in the Hamptons by New York magazine. The guest list at their farmhouse included the usual suspects, Tom Hanks and Meg Ryan (what, was Billy Crystal busy all summer?). Nora is purported to prepare home cooked meals for everyone at the house from her own famous recipe book. The couple is said to entertain guests with heated games of charades.

With all the cooking and charades playing, Ephron and Pileggi have not yet had time to pen a screenplay together. There is no denying the audience the inevitable Meg Ryan/ Robert De Niro pairing that would result from their collaboration. Bobby whacks Harry and, after a romantic night at Rao's, walks off into the witness protection program with Sally and the relationship neither one of them were ever able to commit to before.

Some of Ephron's biggest successes in Hollywood have come when she wrote the screenplay and helmed the picture. She was writer/director on the films Sleepless in Seattle, Mixed Nuts, and You've Got Mail. She has proved herself to be a major player in the boys' club that is typical of Hollywood. And she has done it all from New York. A hat-trick in some circles.

Her most recent success was the play Imaginary Friends, a musical about Lillian Hellman and Mary McCarthy. Memorably, the program for the play featured two small girls on a swing both circled in different colored crayon. Written next to one is the word "liar," and next to the other, "bitch." The real McCarthy and Hellman never had a satisfactory face to face, although McCarthy announced on Dick Cavett's talk show in 1980 that every word Hellman writes is a lie, including "and" and "the." The two seemed fertile ground for Ephron's wry eye, and she imagines them meeting after death — with music no less.

Her latest project is Bewitched, an innovative take on the classic sitcom. Bewitched is in pre-production now and is expected to be released in 2005. The film stars Nicole Kidman as Samantha (sort of) and Will Farrell as Darrin Stevens (sort of). See, the two play actors playing Samantha and Darrin in a movie remake of the sitcom Bewitched. The hook: the Kidman character is a real witch out to see how the other half lives. (Nicole Kidman, however, is apparently not a real witch, although no one has asked Tom Cruise his opinion lately.) Shirley McLaine and Michael Caine round out the cast. Ephron co-wrote the script (again with sister Delia) and will also direct, so audiences can expect something a cut above the standard movie adaptation.

Thirty years on from her reportage from the frontlines of the battle between the sexes we still have Nora Ephron to sort things out, even if she has gone a little postmodern. Her earlier writings, like Wallflower at the Orgy, still resonate with women and men alike, her beat is still the human condition and she still makes us laugh, too.

Shinnecock

leaflet a list of the five longest drives off the tee during the tournament so far. Levin was on the list, fifth, behind Watson, Olsen, Love and Allenby. I also heard, in the stands, someone comment that Levin had hit a hole in one on the front nine. First of his career. In any case, he was by far the top amateur in the tournament to that point.

As Levin and Janzen cleared the green, all eyes looked off down the fairway to see Tiger Woods and his playing partner, Daniel Chopra of Sweden, tee off. They were little specks way out there, and we could not see the balls coming at us. In any case, neither of them went beyond that second trap to where we could see them in front of the green. When the players arrived to survey the scene, there was Tiger, off to the left of the fairway, in the tall rough. He had not hit a good tee shot.

The sign now said he was five over par. On the prior two holes he must have done just awfully. He was struggling.

After looking over his shot, he took out a club and punched the ball out of the rough, but not far enough. It landed in the nearer of the two traps. Now, as he walked toward it, he stared at his shoes, kicking at the grass as he went.

Tiger on the 13th again

The crowd was silent when he went into the trap, but they cheered him when he made a brilliant recovery to come within four feet of the pin. He holed out. Unsteadily, he had made a par.

As Woods walked off the green here on the 13th, he did something that my girl friend and I disagree about. She says he tossed the ball to his caddy, who failed to catch it. I say he tossed the ball, maybe or maybe not in frustration or anger. In any case, it dribbled off the green, a sad end to his play on that hole.

Usually when you see the pros play golf, at Augusta or at Pebble Beach, they are a wonder to behold. They do things with clubs and golf balls that seem almost impossible to anyone watching them play. But here at Shinnecock Hills, it was a different story. Everybody was having a hard time. Even on this simple hole, a master such as Tiger Woods was having a hard time. What is it with Shinnecock Hills?

The course is not long. It is not particularly hilly. It is, however, very old, having been laid out in the nineteenth century, one of the few courses remaining that are from that era.

The fact is, it is beyond challenging. Whoever designed it made it so if you hit the ball very well, but just a few feet off course, it skitters off someplace into trouble. The greens are tilted. During the rest of the day, we watched golfers hit the ball just a tap, to try to get a five foot putt into the cup, only to have it roll and roll and wind up forty feet away from where it began. The golfers call the course "a great test" and "brilliant." It is ranked the third best golf course in America by Golf Digest. But everyone is being kind. Having walked it, I can tell you it is a painful thing to watch people try to play it. It's like handing Babe Ruth a baseball bat, pointing him at a tall cliff and telling him to climb it halfway up and then hit a few home runs.

And I haven't even mentioned the wind. When we sat in the stands on the thirteenth in the hot sun, the air was still, thick as a steam bath. One hour later, the wind was a stiff breeze, fifteen knots, sending carefully thought out golf shots over here or over there. They say these sudden changes have something to do with the fastness of the ocean and the bay, the hill upon which the course is perched, and the lack of woods. Whatever it is, it screws up the best laid plans of mice and men.

In the end, South African Retief Goosen won the Open, fighting off crowd favorite Phil Mickelson, who managed to three putt a four foot putt to fall out of contention on the next to last hole. Spencer Levin was 12 strokes behind. Tiger Woods wound up 14 strokes behind. And on the last day, Sunday, absolutely nobody in the entire field of 66 golfers was able to shoot par or below.

"Boy, were we surprised. It was this old Jag. Mom took the lead in her car, and me and my brother got in the Jag and we drove it home. On the way it overheated, and my brother said to ~~start the car~~ and wave my arms to my mother who was ahead ~~so she'd see we~~ were in trouble and stop, so I did and my ~~mother~~ waved back and kept going."

"How'd your brother get it home?"

"He'd push in the clutch and race the engine to keep the water circulating. And we got home. All us kids used the Jag. I went to the junior prom in it, my brothers and sisters went to the proms and other occasions in it, it held up for about three years and then the whole rear end locked up. We just parked it. But then I started dating the son of a farmer nearby and he said he could fix anything and I should show him the car. Nine of the ten bolts holding the differential on were sheared off, and the tenth was bent. He fixed it. So I married him."

"Then what?"

"Meet Tom," she said. I turned around. "My husband."

I turned around. I shook hands with Tom.

"Here's sort of what happened after that," Joan continued. "Tom keeps it in good repair. My mom sells me the car for a dollar. And my dad and I get together a few years ago — this is 38 years later and we haven't talked for all that time — and the first thing he asks is what ever happened to that car I got for you guys?"

This final paragraph has nothing to do with the best story told to me that morning, but it might be of interest to people who have dogs. Or scientists who study dog behavior.

I walked around ~~this grassy field~~, looking at all these cars lined up in their ~~rows~~, accompanied by my little white dog, who is named Spaulding. Spaulding is very well behaved and wouldn't even think of sniffing or peeing on or going into any of these cars unless I ordered him to. So I was quite comfortable with that.

We had come to the event in an old open sports car that I have owned for many years, a red 1959 Triumph TR-3. I've never seen a TR-3 at this event before, nor have I entered mine. I usually park it up by the split rail fence at the edge of the field and then walk to all the antique cars.

On this day, though, there was a beautifully restored white 1959 Triumph TR-3 in the line. It made me smile to see the very distinctive lines of ~~this automobile~~ and I thought I'd like to talk to the owner ~~about~~ it. As we walked over, and keep in mind this was a WHITE TR-3, I saw the owner by the driver's door, which was open. Spaulding ran on ahead and jumped in. He turned and wagged his tail. Where we going next? Go figure.

Nation (continued from page 34)

idea to the USGA and it was rejected. This is how a spokesperson for the USGA, Marty Parks, explained the rejection of the ceremony.

"It's not like the Super Bowl or Olympics, where they have a halftime show or something like that. Because of scattered tee times, there really is no time to do it. But we explained this to them, and they understood that."

How about behind the first tee for a few minutes just prior to the first player teeing off?

* * *

Then, as the event got underway, without the slightest approval from the Shinnecock Nation, the USGA security people came on the reservation and proceeded to block off and send traffic just one way down a Shinnecock Road called Old Soldiers Road. The Shinnecoeks immediately called the State Police, said the Shinnecock kids had to get to school, and the State Police came and reversed this decision, sending the USGA away.

Finally, the USGA announced something they thought would be a good thing. They said a lot of left over material from the temporary structures built at the Shinnecock tournament would, after it was over, be donated to the Indian nation. These would include wood, stairs, gravel and carpeting. But not the stuff that they could haul away and use again at next year's Open.

This material will probably include such things as pennants, post cards and ash trays with the Shinnecock Indian portrait and the slogan U. S. OPEN 2004 on them that never got sold. It will also undoubtedly include material the USGA would normally have to pay to haul away.

Judge all this for yourself.

20 Years Ago In Dan's Papers

On The Difficulty of Writing

June 1, 1984

There's all sorts of things that I have to do before I can actually sit down and start writing stories or articles for this paper. I have to change the ribbon in the typewriter, shine my shoes, take out the garbage, take off my shoes, have a nap, sharpen a pencil. Everything must be just right. I suppose it is because writing is such a courageous thing to be doing, putting one word down next to another for all the world to see, that all these things suddenly have to get done. Anything to avoid actually doing it.

There is the story of a writer who had his proposal accepted by a publisher, thus receiving a one thousand dollar advance. The bargain was that the work had to be completed by December 31, of the year. Well, December came and went and there was no word from the writer, and so the publisher sent him a letter granting an extension.

"I can understand that you might have been delayed" the publisher wrote, "and so I'm granting you an extension until June 30."

Well June came and went and there was no word from the writer, and so the publisher was naturally peeved.

"I can grant you another extension since you apparently need it," the publisher wrote. "I will give you until December 31 of this year to finish the project. If it is not completed by this time, you may consider it cancelled. Please write to me by the first of December to tell me how things are coming along."

The beginning of December came and there was no word from the writer. The middle of December came and there was no word from the writer. Finally, on December 20, the publisher received a short note in the mail.

"I will begin working on this project just as soon as I find my blue tennis sneakers," it said.

Long Island and The Ayatollah

June 15, 1984

Well, the Iran-Iraq war is heating up. Last week, the Iranians used their old F-5 fighter planes to attack oil tankers off the Saudi Arabian coast. But the Saudis responded, sending up state-of-the art F-15s, which easily overwhelmed the F-5s, shot down two, and drove the rest away.

Washington was jubilant. Apparently, the decision to provide Saudi Arabia with the very latest military equipment was going to pay off. The Saudis would patrol the strait (guided by American AWCAS,) and then simply drive off the Iranians whenever they might appear.

But wait. Two days after this air battle,

Authors Writing About The Hamptons

The following is an excerpt from James Brady's novel The House That Ate The Hamptons. It is a comedic, fictional story of the schemes and dramas of the world that surrounds the Maidstone Club in East Hampton. James Brady is a critically acclaimed writer and a veteran of the Korean War. He is a weekly columnist for Advertising Age and Parade Magazines, and his previous novels include Paris One, Further Lane, and Korea, The Coldest War. He lives in Manhattan and on Further Lane in East Hampton. This novel is available in local bookstores and at Amazon.com.

The House That Ate The Hamptons by James Brady Chapter 7

The afternoon sun had begun its stately fall toward Hook Pond as golfers straggled in from the tough back nine, when I encountered bibliophile (and Maidstone Club librarian ex-officio) Cyril Pilaster in the bar and we agreed it might be a good idea to have a martini. The stemmed, wide-rimmed glasses that were all the rage last summer had just been set down before us when they began trembling and vibrating as the damndest roar came through the open ocean-fronting windows of the club.

"By God! Someone's landing a chopper on the club beach, by God!"

All about the grand old barroom men were standing now, several tottering but by God! on their feet. Even Tony Duke, and you know how cool he is, was up and staring.

"Never seen that before," said Donald Kirk in amazement, the engine even louder.

"Nor I," Bryan Webb agreed. Webb was one of the keenest lawyers on Park Avenue, and impressed despite himself, sensibly knocked back a gin.

"By God!" Barney Leason called out, snapping his fingers for a waiter. "Fetch a refill here. I want to see this, by God!"

Not that there was much to see through the miniature sandstorm kicked up and sent whirling in every direction.

"Can't be a member," Chas. Mitchelmore remarked. "Not with foursomes still out on the course and lining up their putts, by God!"

The helicopter was a big one. You could tell even before its rotors slowed and the sandstorm thinned.

"By God! It's a big son of a bitch," a member murmured behind me, impressed despite himself. Cocktail hour at the Maidstone is not often distinguished by original thought or turn of phrase.

"It certainly is," I agreed, my own remarks as banal as any.

Out there on the beach, beyond the faded old cabanas, the chopper was at rest. Three crewmen now emerged, holding out helping hands to a tall young woman wearing shades but hatless, her dark brown hair pleasantly tousled by the wind, and clad in a leather flight jacket, slim tan slacks, and a white silk scarf knotted loosely about her longish throat. A very Amelia Earhart look. As I stared, she gracefully, nimbly, made her down the aluminum ladder, followed swiftly by others, men, down to the sand. From this distance I had no idea who the men were. Besides, I was focusing on the woman, who looked awfully good. And quite tan. But perhaps that was makeup.

"Who the devil's that?" a member demanded.

"A woman, by God! It's a woman landed on the club beach!"

A woman, yes! I wanted to cry out. And what a woman! But why join in the general confusion?

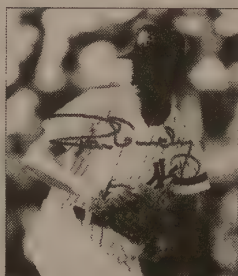

"Who the hell are these people?" another shouted and then, suddenly aware these new arrivals might indeed be club members, he fell to mumbling, "All very well if they belong, I mean..."

By God! they'd better! the customarily gentle, soft-spoken Cy Pilaster offered. Poor Cy was already out of sorts about something else. Helicopters and women were simply

The Sheltered Island By Sally Flynn

Observations of an Islander #304

She sells sea cells by the sea shore....

I don't have a cell phone yet. I've been a hold-out. I just can't see myself standing in the middle of roads shouting into phones designed for Thumbelina. I love watching my brothers chronically searching for something with a defined tip to use to dial their cell phones since their fingertips cover up three keys at a time. David refers to his cell phone as his "communicator" a la Star Trek, but even Star Trek communicators were bigger than his cell phone. Brian's cell phone cannot be seen in his huge hand at all when he is talking on it. He looks like he's cupping a sea shell to his ear and shouting at his elbow.

Then there's the whole 'choose your own phone ring' option that I hate. No little beep-beep sound, no, we've all got to have a unique ring, like you won't know if your pocket is ringing for you or someone else...

I hate the classical music rings. The muffled first two bars of a classical piece played by Jiminy Cricket emanating from your back pocket is silly. The only advantage is if you're sitting in the Dory and you've just made a bar bet that you can play Mozart with your ass.

My brother David agonized over whether to have his phone play 'When Irish Eyes are Smiling' or the Budweiser theme. He finally went with 'When Irish Eyes are Smiling' because he works in construction and whenever the Budweiser theme is heard, half the men reach for their phones. I'm not getting a cell phone until they have nice selection of Big Band rings for me.

Signal checking is the new aerobic. People walk all around in the road on the island watching for cars as they search for signal. And once they find their signal, they take root on that spot and chat away. I have had to swerve to avoid people who are standing too far in the road, completely oblivious to passing cars. People wander into strangers' front yards, stand in strangers' driveways, and chat at full volume of voice so that the homeowners think a 60 Minutes crew is on the way to their front door.

I do enjoy people who chat loud on their phones in restaurants. In these cases, I adhere to the axiom, if you can't beat 'em, join 'em. This technique works every time. It usually goes something like this:

Chatter to phone: "So he just left her a note? Oh, that really sucks..."

Me from two tables away: "What'd the note say?"

Chatter to me: "Pardon me?"

Me, loudly: "I said what did the note say?"

Chatter: "Excuse me, but this is a private conversation."

Me, loudly: "Not if half the restaurant can hear it, it ain't."

Chatter to phone: "I'll call you later, there's a really rude woman in the restaurant."

'Shop by phone' usually means dialing for something you saw on TV. But with cell phones, 'Shop by phone' means sending your man to the grocery store and since you have the shelves memorized, you have him push the cart around as you direct him via cell phone.

She says: "Okay, now you're in Aisle 6. Look down to your right, get the Friskies cat food with the pink label, not the green."

He says: "There's two colors of pink, which one is it?"

She says: "It has a little shrimp on the label. You have to LOOK at the label."

He says: "Looks more like a prawn. What am I getting, shrimp or prawn?"

She says: "Just put the can in the cart."

He says: "Why am I getting shrimp for the cat? If I get her the cheap stuff, I'll have money for some good beer."

She says: "She throws up the cheap cat food that's why we don't buy it."

He says: "Well, I throw up cheap beer and you still make me buy that...maybe that's the problem. How about I buy the good beer and cheap cat food for a change, and the cat can have a turn throwing up this week?"

I will concede, there are some advantages to cell phones. They are perfect for dinner reservations. My brother David was fishing with Eric Springer recently and called to report he caught "...a nice big blue fish. Okay Sissy, in the cabinet, behind the beans, pull out the two cans of stewed tomatoes reserved in the event of bluefish and have the pan ready!"

GEORGE FANTASIZES ABOUT A EUROPEAN SPA.

Pat says, "In your dreams."

For over 30 years, I've indulged George's every fantasy, no matter how far out they seemed. And most of the time they've been fine.

But, this time he's gone off the deep end. Suddenly, he decided that he needed the ultimate bathing experience.

And the only place he can get it is at a European Spa.

I know that isn't so. And, if he'd only stop working long enough to get into our pool, he'd know it too.

BIOGUARD'S® MINERAL SPRINGS® pool

care system transforms any pool's water into the most pleasurable, soothing and luxurious experience that you can imagine.

MINERAL SPRINGS sanitizes the water with the perfect combination of nature and technology.

So, one night when George was almost asleep, I seductively whispered in his ear, "George, I have a fantasy...(that really got his attention)...much better than your European Spa. It's about MINERAL SPRINGS." Come in to talk about it.

George is the one with the smile.

The hatch secured and the crewmen back inside, the rotor was now turning as the wind again began to stir, and the chopper vanished into the enveloping sandstorm.

"But don't they have to file flight plans?" a trustee was asking of no one in particular and the entire club in general, "to say nothing of notifying the Maidstone? Using our beach and so on..."

"Well, yes," Stuyvesant Wainwright III said thoughtfully, "except that..."

"Damned women! By God!" somebody added helpfully.

It so happened that I'd recognized both the chopper and the woman who'd alighted from it but thought this was no time to say so, not with the membership in so considerable a stir. And so Pilaster and I had a second martini over which he told me what was really eating at him. Not helicopters or women. But Sammy Glique.

"I don't understand how your father puts up with him. Even at chess."

"The Admiral has his moments as well," I assured Pilaster.

"So do we all. But Glique? His peculiarities..." Pilaster hesitated, and then plunged ahead. "Recently he began collecting first editions. You know his enthusiasms. They wax, they wane. For a time there, rare books. Knowing of my interest, he called upon me this spring for assistance. I was only too willing to give."

"Yes?" I asked, not really caring but curious.

Cy Pilaster sipped at his cocktail, bracing himself perhaps. He was a thoroughgoing gentleman weighing the propriety of his words. Ought a man like Pilaster reveal what went on between him and Sammy Glique?

"You know how anal he can be..."

"Yes."

"Well, then, he asked me to bring my expertise to bear on the rather simple problem of cataloguing and arranging his books. There weren't that many, several hundred, many of them quite good. Others pretty worthless, foisted on the poor fellow by confidence men and swindlers. He'd had some fine teak bookcases built for his house, showed them off to me with considerable pride. So I set to work, utilizing a simple and universally accepted method of sorting the volumes by fiction and nonfiction, author and subject, and so on. Only to fall afoul of Glique's mania for symmetrical order!"

"You mean...?"

"Glique threw out my system and rearranged every single book by the height of each volume!"

"Everything must fit!" he informed me.

"I guess I chuckled. 'But that isn't how one arranges good books, Glique', I told him.

"It is in this house!" he shouted, sensing a patronizing tone in my voice."

"How rotten for you," I told Pilaster. "There you were, helping out, and he—"

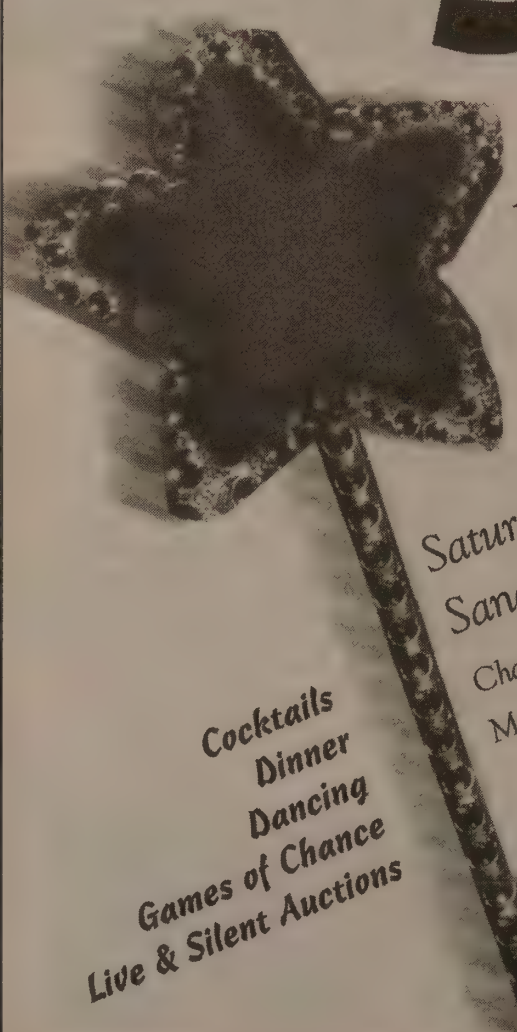

"Oh, it got worse, Beecher. Within moments we were rolling about on the floor of his library, books tossed this way and that, pages torn, bindings wrenched apart, two middle-aged men grappling and gouging, hurling insults in the most debased language. Both of us, I'm afraid, trashing books. I, in the end, as bad as Sammy Glique..."

I snapped my fingers for the waiter. Clearly, Cyril Pilaster could use an other one following this account of an embarrassing interlude in an ordered and book-lined life.

I could use one myself, having recognized the big chopper that had so disconcerted hon. members. It belonged to billionaire Ronald O. Perelman, who owned the largest estate in East Hampton, and often ferried him back and forth between the Creeks, his magnificent spread on Georgica Pond, and Manhattan. I knew the sleeky impressive ship because, several years ago while still writing for Newsweek, I'd done a profile of Mr. Perelman, a rich man showing off his toys, and had been given a ride.

I also knew the young woman who stepped down from Perelman's magnificent helicopter at the elegantly faded cabanas of the Maidstone Club. And I knew her well enough to be sure she was not just another "rich man's toy."

military analysts informed Washington that Iran was finally figuring out how to fly the most sophisticated fighter in the world, the F-14, produced by the Grumman Corporation right here on eastern Long Island. The F-14's have been part of the Iranian air force since the days of the Shah, but Washington has been under the impression that the aircraft was simply too complicated to be flown without proper training. The fact that the F-14s had been seen escorting the F-5s into battle, apparently providing radar information, made front page of the New York Times.

"For the moment anyway," an official said, "the Iranians seem to have been unable to figure out how to make the F-14s missile delivery system work."

It was big news here on eastern Long Island back in 1978 when Grumman was ordered to prepare eighty of these planes for Iran. There were pictures in the paper at the time, which showed president Nixon and the Shah, arm in arm, walking along in front of some F-14s. The Shah was America's friend. The Shah would defend America's interests in the middle east, using his new F-14s to replace the ten year old F-5s that had been given to him earlier.

Before the rioting in Iran started, seventy nine of the eighty planes were delivered to the Iranian air force. What happened, however, was that the Iranians could not initially figure out how to operate any of them. Time went by, American instructors came, and, for awhile there it seemed that the Iranians would soon get the hang of it. If it hadn't been for the overthrow of the Shah and the expulsion of the Americans shortly thereafter, they probably would have.

During this brief interval, I remember stories coming out of Iran about how difficult it was going to be to get the Shah's air force into the F-14s. For one thing, the Iranian air force had a rule that anyone in the military breaking anything had to be completely responsible for it. If a soldier broke a rifle, for example, the cost of replacing it came out of his pay. If it was more than his pay, he'd be punished.

At the Khatamy Air Force Base at Isfahan, however, where the F-14s were kept, this presented enormous problems. When a trained Iranian technician, for example, one who was almost fully knowledgeable with the F-14, accidentally pulled the red lever that fired the ejection seat on one of the planes while cleaning it, he was banished from the airbase and never seen again. He'd caused over a million dollars worth of damage when he'd done that.

Other members of the Iran air force disappeared when other parts of the F-14's were accidentally broken or simply malfunctioned. And then, there was the problem of getting fresh spare parts out of the warehouse at Khatamy. The air force people working the warehouse never seemed to be able to find any of the parts that were supposed to be there. They would fill out forms, lose them, fill out more forms, lose those too. Gradually it became clear that the warehouse people were fearful that they too would disappear if a part they provided turned out to be broken.

When the Shah was overthrown a few months later, therefore, it was felt certain that the new government would never get the F-14 off the ground. Washington simply ceased worrying about it – except for a fear that the F-14 might fall into Soviet hands.

According to the New York Times, it is now believed that the Iranians have cannibalized around sixty of the F-14s in order to get fourteen of them to fly. How soon they might figure out the missile system is anybody's guess.

Back in the mid 1970s, when Grumman first produced the F-14 as the premier fighter plane for the U.S. Navy, Grumman took out full page ads in many of the local papers in these parts to boast that the F-14 was the fastest, smartest, most awesome fighter plane ever produced in the world. A few years later, when another American firm produced the F-15 fighter for the U.S. Army, there was occasional debate, in a playful vein, about which was better, the Grumman F-14 or the McDonnell F-15.

It now seems entirely possible that, over the Straits of Hormuz, we might soon find out.
—Dan Rattiner

Love Heals

With the US Open taking over the Hamptons and the fifth annual Love Heals in Sagaponack, this past Saturday was the unofficial kick off to summer.

For the past thirteen years, close friends Victoria Leacock, Dini von Mueffling and Stefani Greenfield have helped keep Alison Gertz's spirit alive by carrying on her message through Love Heals. The event raised more than one hundred and fifty thousand dollars for The Alison Gertz Foundation for AIDS Education. Leacock told me, "Ali Gertz, who was diagnosed with AIDS in 1988, changed all of our lives. She was our best friend and when she died in 1992 we just swore that we were going to prevent other people from losing their best friends to a totally preventable illness. That's what we try to do." Greenfield, co-founder of Scoop clothing stores, added, "Yes, educate your mind, protect your body. Right now it's a crucial time for people to believe this disease is still growing; it's not over. Mueffling shares, "In Ali's day she didn't know about AIDS, she didn't know to protect herself against it, but this a preventable disease. Alison's parents Carol and Jerrold Gertz attend Love Heals every year. Jerrold told me, "I'm feeling fine and she's here somewhere watching over us." Carol shared, "We feel wonderful, in as much that her name goes on and her friends have continued Love Heals." Carol joked, "This is the young people's party. We're the grandparents here. It's a wonderful night." More than six hundred guests bopped to the beats of DJ Samantha Ronson, including Shoshanna and Josh Gruss, Anne Hearst, Chris Heinz, Jeff Goldstein, Gigi Stone, Minnie Mortimer, Reed Krakoff, Jason and Haley Binn, Star Jones and Al Reynolds enjoyed a Backyard Barbecue theme complete with pink flamingos (not real), frosty fruit flavored martinis and gourmet BBQ ribs. Clothing Designer Shoshanna Gruss revealed the must-have item for summer, "This year, it's the little sundress. Always the easiest to throw on and show off a great tan. The hottest for every girl in the room." Shoshanna donated one of her latest sundresses to the silent auction.

Chris Heinz, Steve Stoute, Tinsley and Topper Mortimer, Joel Warren kept the party going at the official Love Heals after party at Jet East while Shoshanna and Josh Gruss headed over to StarRoom for night cap with Carmen Kass with boyfriend Richie Akiva, Jessie Della Femina, Mark Packer, and David Schulhof.

My sources say that Paris Hilton will be throwing a small intimate party at an undisclosed location in the Hamptons this July 4th weekend. Paris will be celebrating the launch of her new record label "Heiress" and I'm told she will be releasing her own album later this summer. Title of her album — "Screwed". How apropos.

Back To The Futures: 2003 Bordeaux Go On Sale

"Keeping in mind that production for the top estates is relatively small, and the best wines quite compelling in quality as well as among the most fascinating efforts Bordeaux has produced in the past three or four decades, it is hard to believe that they will not become precious commodities sooner rather than later...I have no reservations about telling readers that if you don't jump in and buy them quickly, you will pay an even dearer price when they show up in bottle," writes wine guru Robert Parker in The Wine Advocate about the 2003 Bordeaux futures, the sale of which Manhattan's Sherry-Lehmann (212-838-7500) has just announced. For every vintage since the legendary wine merchant began offering futures in 1959, Sherry-Lehmann experts have visited Bordeaux and tasted the wines themselves to determine which ones they would offer their discerning clientele. Here are some of the top picks:

Chateau Lafite-Rothschild - "Revealing enormous richness, flesh, and succulence, the 2003 Lafite Rothschild is one of the candidates for 'wine of the vintage'... I have never tasted a Lafite Rothschild quite like this. This is one first-growth worth mortgaging the house for!" -Robert Parker, rated 98-100. And you may have to at $360 bottle/$4100 the case.

Chateau Latour - "One of the three greatest young Bordeaux I have ever tasted... In fact, I do not believe I have ever tasted a Latour like this. I wonder how the 1961 would have tasted at a similar period? Sadly, Latour's small production means that only 10,000 cases will be produced." -Robert Parker, rated 98-100. A once in a lifetime experience, especially if you came of drinking age after '61, can be yours for $420 bottle/$4800 the case.

Chateau Montrose - "Magnificently rich, unctuously textured, and full-bodied, with huge presence on the palate... this is a legendary effort from Montrose. It is capable of rivaling the wines produced in 2000, 1990, and 1989." -Robert Parker, rated 96-100. I love the big wines of Montrose, and though the days of $20 bottles are sadly a thing of the past, this wine is a relative bargain at $225 bottle/$2225 the case.

Though these wines are among the most expensive in the world, the prices upon release promise to be even higher. So don't miss this opportunity if you love the great reds of Bordeaux. But don't get any ideas about stocking up on multiple cases. All three futures are on a "one case limit per customer" basis at Sherry-Lehmann. You will also need to exercise patience: they won't be available for delivery until spring of 2006.

In the meantime, uncork a bottle of Tavel or Comtesse Therese Rosé. It's summer, and though it appears that we have something extraordinary to look forward to in '06, we may as well enjoy ourselves as we wait. Carpe diem. Cheers.

The Jewish Newspaperman Who Became Prime Minister of New Zealand

A True Story Told By Publisher Dan Rattiner To A Riverhead Audience

By Jolie Trueman-Honey

When North Fork editor, Susan Simm, asked me if I was interested in covering a lecture by Dan Rattiner (yes, Dan's Papers' Dan) at Temple Israel of Riverhead, I agreed without hesitation. Having worked as a proofreader at Dan's Papers for over a year, I knew one thing: Dan is a master storyteller. If he was giving a lecture, I wanted to hear it.

It wasn't, however, until I read the North Fork section of last week's paper that I discovered the topic of his talk: "The Jewish Newspaperman Who Became Prime Minister of New Zealand," and suddenly I became a little anxious. Was this "lecture" going to be another of Dan's "giant Ecuadorian eel" stories?

Despite my anxiety, I must confess that I was intrigued by his title. Ever since I was a little kid, I'd heard adults saying things like: Kirk Douglas? A Jew. Sandy Koufax? A Jew. It seemed to give them endless pleasure to point out Jews (particularly those without "Jewish" names) who had somehow made their mark. Maybe it's a Jewish thing. After all, Adam Sandler's Hannukah Song is based on the same premise: "Paul Newman's half Jewish/ And Goldie Hawn's half, too. Put them together/ what a fine looking Jew!"

So, is it possible that a Jew was actually the Prime Minister of New Zealand? I couldn't wait to find out.

But first I'd have to attend Shabbat services, something I hadn't done in a long time. Though I don't understand Hebrew, I found the service relaxing and comforting, a winding down from the harried work-week and a nod toward the restorative power of a weekend. As the hymn goes, "Shabbat is a gift of dignity and rest... Struggle and dissonance are forgotten. We are embraced by peace and holiness." The melodies were familiar, and it moved me to see this small but obviously close-knit congregation drawn together in response to their enthusiastic young rabbi.

And then what everyone was waiting for: Dan. The ubiquitous straw hat removed in favor of a turquoise yarmulke, he made his way to the dais. Not a vocally powerful speaker, he still kept us on the edge of our pews. And while I could never attempt to replicate his style or humor, I can tell you what the talk with that very intriguing title was about.

Some ten or eleven years ago, Dan became interested in New Zealand. Since he is known to be an avid animal lover, it may have had something to do with the ratio of humans to animals ("So few people; so many sheep,") but he planned to spend about four weeks there. Before he left, however, his mother told him about a friend of hers, Odeda Rosenthal, who had recently written a book entitled Not Strictly Kosher: Pioneer Jews in New Zealand. The book apparently noted that an early prime minister, Julius Vogel, was indeed a Jew. Dan stored this information in the same way in which he stores his other innumerable bits of trivia, and off he went.

Traveling from farm stay to farm stay (our equivalent of a B&B), he enjoyed the dramatic countryside being restored as a tourist attraction. A short walk through the woods brought Dan to a colony of tiny primitive buildings which were once the homes of the Chinese laborers who worked the mines. These, too, were being restored and when he entered one, he saw, behind some old plaster that was being removed, a newspaper that had been affixed to the wall as "insulation." It was from an 1861 edition of the Otago Daily Times, a regional paper that is still published in New Zealand. But what really caught Dan's eye was that under the headline, it said, "Volume 1, Number 1."

So, he started to read. And the best part of this very first edition was a letter from the publisher to his new readership. It so impressed Dan that he copied that letter verbatim and read it to us. It was an appeal to the people to support the paper, to read it, to advertise in it. And he promised them one thing: this local paper would become such an integral part of their lives that someday its absence would prove a "public calamity."

On Dan traveled, and in a little village called Thorpe, he stayed with a farm family that was also hosting a man named Brian James, who, ironically, was the present editor of the Otago Daily Times. James was astonished to hear Dan's story because, apparently, three years earlier, the paper had celebrated its 125th anniversary. And while they had copies of other early editions, they did not think that a copy of the first edition existed. During the conversation that ensued, Dan asked the inevitable question:

did James, by any chance, know the name of the publisher who wrote that letter? "Why, yes," James responded. "His name was Julius Vogel. He later became prime minister of New Zealand."

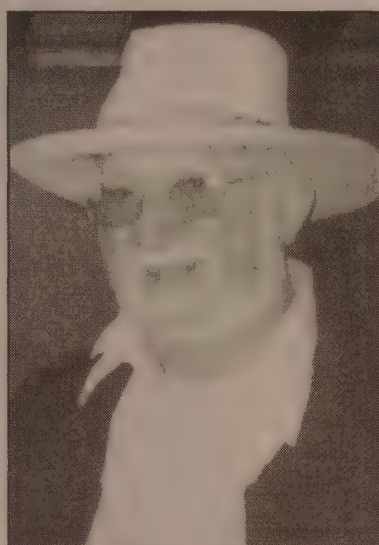

Dan went on to tell us more about Vogel's life. "So was he any good?" came a question from the congregation at the conclusion of the lecture. Dan responded that, unfortunately, according to Rosenthal's book, Vogel was lousy. He suffered from gout, became nasty, and returned to London for treatments more often than his constituency liked, using the excuse that "going back to London is a big 'walk-about'!"

The talk ended and Dan and the congregation filed to the lower level for refreshments. But I was left with this: this wasn't a story about a Jewish guy who "made it." This was a story about two Jewish guys, separated by half the globe and more than a century, who had a similar sensibility. Two newspapermen who, through foresight and passion, had what it took to inaugurate their own local papers.

The "Best Of The Best" Of Our Dining Destinations

"Summertime, and the livin' is easy..."

Perhaps no one ever conjured up summer better than George Gershwin when he wrote the music, set to DuBose Heyward's lyrics, as part of the folk opera Porgy and Bess back in 1935. Hot days and balmy nights in our local clime invite idleness as nothing else can. Even Caribbean jaunts mid-winter lack the power to elicit the true, sustained and delicious sloth of a Northeast summer.

This year, though warmth has come late to our part of the world, Silver Queen corn, rosy vine-ripened tomatoes, and juicy white peaches redolent of wine will appear at our farmstands and on our award-winning restaurants' menus. And preceded as they were by our eager and prolonged anticipation, the reward will be, as the saying goes, so much the sweeter for the wait.

—Susan W. Simm, Dan's North Fork Editor

Bayview Inn & Restaurant. Culinary fireworks from a new sparkler facing Peconic Bay. The historic Bayview has undergone many identity changes since its inception as an 1860's boutique hotel. Owners Bob and Pat Patchell have restored its original spirit, with seven guestrooms and the North Fork's most exciting new dining room. Thomas Lopez creates separate specials menus, complementing his regular card of winners like spinach pasta with chunky lobster, Asian-style breast of duck, and marinated lamb chops in mint demi-glace. Scrumptious desserts and a kid's menu ensure everyone goes home (or upstairs) happy. South Jamesport Ave. and Front Street, South Jamesport. 722-2659. Entrees, $18-$26. (Trueman-Honey, 8/1/03). {Di,S,Sh}

Claudio's. In its 133rd year of continuous family ownership, Claudio's symbolizes the North Fork much as the Montauk Lighthouse represents the South Fork. The lovingly preserved bar was rescued from the bowery in 1885. You're truly drinking in history when enjoying a famed martini there. New chef Michael Ruggiero cleverly traces the restaurant's history. He's not only maintained Claudio's time-honored favorites, but his specials reflect founder Manuel Claudio's Portuguese and Mediterranean ancestry. And if you like your oysters raw, sea-fresh and plump, you'll do no better from here to Chesapeake Bay. 111 Main St., Greenport. 477-0627. Entrees, $17-$26. (Bradbrook, 7/25/03).

The Clubhouse at Indian Island. Along the pretty Peconic River at Indian Island Golf Course, this restaurant offers quality cooking at realistic prices convenient to diners from both forks. New proprietor Russ Moran transformed a drab dining room to one of warmth and comfort with soft lighting and smartly laid tables. His eclectic menu features the gently pan-fried oysters and clams on the half shell, which you'd swear were just plucked from the bay. French onion soup is deep in flavor. L.I. duck in a pepper cherry sauce and calves liver with bacon & onions were tasty and will leave no one hungry. Riverside Drive & Route 105, Riverhead. 727-0788. Entrees, $11.95-$16.95. (Bradbrook, 4/16/04).

Cooperage Inn. With a beautiful new look emphasizing the cooperage theme, this charmer continues to carry the banner of North Fork cuisine. Chef/owner Jonathan Perkins, along with chefs Laimo and Hegeman, produce inspired appetizers such as rare sesame tuna carpaccio and pan-seared fresh mozzarella, and don't miss the sesame crusted calamari served over field greens with a soy vinaigrette. Steaks are steakhouse worthy, and the rigatoni ala vodka continues to dazzle. Fish here is always pristine and cooked with a light hand. Entrees $15.50-$30. 2218 Sound Ave. Baiting Hollow. 727-8994. (Simm, 1/10/03). {Br,D}

Desmond's Pub & Restaurant at the Inn at East Wind. The North Fork's new destination hotel hosts an elegant and restful dining room serving excellent a la carte dishes and classic pub fare. Executive chef Richard Laurelli's daily specials are consistent stand-outs, as evidenced by his chilled vegetable soup with lobster meat, as well as the Andalusia-style beef and chicken tapas. Pub favorites like crisply battered cod and chips hit the mark and familiar entrees like grilled lamb chops are perfectly prepared. The wine list is sensibly priced, though short on local vintages. Blueberry creme brulee was an inventive and winning update on a classic dessert. Entrees, $16-$26. 5720 Rt. 25A, Wading River. 929-3500. (Bradbrook, 8/29/03). {Pu}.

Thai mussels in ginger/lemongrass broth hit the mark. Excellent pasta dishes, headlined by justifiably famous Seafood Pasta in white wine sauce, filled with mussels, clams and shrimp over linguine with fresh tomatoes and spinach. Stuffed ravioli with sun-dried tomatoes and mozzarella is beautifully done. Sensibly priced wine list, with a knowing nod to local vintages. Entrees, $12.95-$19.95. ## Tosca Thrills SRO Audience At Borghese Vineyards

By Roy Bradbrook

The Opera of the Hamptons opened its 13th season with a splendid performance of Puccini's Tosca on Saturday, June 19, at Castello di Borghese Vineyards in Cutchogue. Tosca is one of the most loved of the grand opera repertoire.

Before the main performance, the capacity audience thrilled to the sonorous baritone voice of Steven Pollack, this year's recipient of the Franco Gentilesca Young Artists Program, founded in honor of the company's much loved and respected stage director who passed away a few years ago. Steven showed the quality and range of his voice with arias from Carmen and La Fanciulla del West and with "When You Walk in the Room," a delightful piece by Sigmund Romberg. Based on this sampling, one can only hope to see this multi-talented artist back playing major roles in future productions.

Tosca is intense in the truest sense of the word. Forget the romanticism Puccini wove into the score of La Boheme, tragic though the final outcome is. Here, in Tosca, is a very different Puccini exploring the depths of depravity that humans will resort to to achieve their desires using Baron Scarpia, the chief of the secret police of Rome back in 1800, as a prime example. Many opera buffs believe that the opera should have been named Scarpia and indeed the role is key. Stephen Fredericks is a bass baritone with both the stage presence and the voice to do justice to this role and it was easy to imagine how Scarpia would be regarded as "the man before whom all Rome trembled," to use the words that the beautiful singer Floria Tosca uses when, as the recipient of his unwelcome advances, she desperately stabs him to death in a futile effort to save her lover. Cavaradossi, who is madly in love with Tosca, is a painter who happens to be in the wrong place at the wrong time, hiding a friend who is a political fugitive from Scarpia.

Derrick Alton made his debut with the company as Cavaradossi and absolutely thrilled the audience with his voice and intensity. From the first act where in the aria "Recondite armonia" he compares the differing beauties of Tosca and the Magdalene he is painting, to the drama and pathos of the aria "E lucevan le stelle" in the final act, where he is overcome with grief as he awaits his execution and writes a final farewell to Tosca, Derrick Alton showed why he has built an acclaimed international reputation. His beautiful voice and acting were compelling and magnificent.

This is probably the only major opera with only one female role. But what a role. Floria Tosca is a very complex emotional woman and Rosa D'Imperio who sang the role with the Opera de Puerto Rico to rave reviews showed exactly why this role is considered one of the plum but very demanding and defining operatic roles. After all, if one of the all time greats such as Maria Callas will always be linked with Tosca, it really indicates why. Rosa D'Imperio both looked and sang the part with incredible emotion and the audience felt for her as Scarpia used his powers to get her to betray the fugitive's hiding place in a misguided attempt to stop Cavaradossi's torture. When she discovers that Scarpia wants her body as the price for her lover's life she protests, in the beautiful aria, "Vissi D'arte," that she has dedicated her life to art and love. When this does not dissuade Scarpia, she stabs him to death in a struggle. Her subsequent remorse and heartrending sorrow when she discovers that even after his death Scarpia has tricked her and Cavaradossi has been executed kept the audience spellbound.

One of the strengths of this production was the quality of the supporting artists, including Stephan Kirchgraber as the fugitive Angelotti, Anthony Tolve, Santo Trapani, and Riverhead's Ishan Arvell Johnson as sinister members of Scarpia's secret police and Haley Willis as the shepherd boy, all of whom made major contributions to the success of the evening. A special mention must be made of Charles Bosselman's cleverly played and excellently sung cameo role as a nervous and very camp Sacristan, a role which injected a welcome though small dose of light relief into the high tension and drama of the plot!

To stage an opera is very demanding and to stage one away from a conventional theater setting is much more so. Hayden de Witt, the stage director for this production, did a superb job in making such good use, not only of the central stage, but she also of the aisles and the exterior of the building to excellent effect, making the performance flow very convincingly. This, coupled with the intimacy of the setting, really drew the audience right into the middle of the action.

Barbara Giancola, Opera of the Hamptons artistic director, gave her customary and always welcome erudite and witty synopsis, which helped every one appreciate the story line. And Atarah Hazzan provided a truly wonderful accompaniment on a magnificent Steinway grand piano loaned by Steinway & Son especially for this performance. Steinway's dedication to the performing arts together with the ongoing support of the New York State Council on the Arts helped make this a wonderful evening for the packed audience, who now will be looking forward to the return of opera to the beautifully restored Vail Leavitt Music Hall in Riverhead when, on Saturday July 31, the melodies of La Boheme will bring opera back to that theater for the first time in over a hundred years.

yard tables, the spirit of Provence is alive in Greenport with highly authentic French cuisine. Its treatment of classics like escargots, French onion soup, and frogs' legs runs the gamut from superb to extraordinary. Rack of lamb, served with rosemary sauce reduction, is masterfully. Desserts are tasty and the crepe options are best expressed in exponential notation. Service is deliberate but attentive. Entrees $24-35. 314 Main Street, Greenport. (Bradbrook, 7/12/02). [C,H,J]

La Cuvée Wine Bar & Bistro at the Greenporter Hotel. Gourmet bistro dining adjoining a hip boutique hotel footsteps from Greenport's vibrant downtown. The casually upscale dining room creates a pleasing environment for a light and adventurous menu. Seafood appetizers like tuna tartar and the sublime mussels in coconut and lemongrass broth bear an unmistakable Asian influence. But executive chef / owner Deborah Rivera's culinary artistry really announces itself when the entrees arrive. Long Island duck in an orange-infused coconut sauce is impressive enough, but topped by her otherworldly Chilean Sea Bass poached in a miso-sesame broth. Exceptional wine list, with by-the-glass offering many pleasant surprises. Entrees, $21-$26. 326 Front Street, Greenport. 477-0066. (Bradbrook, 4/25/03). [B,W]

La Plage. A glowing beacon along the Sound coast for sophisticated diners. The stellar reputation of chef / proprietor Wayne Wadington derives from cutting-edge combinations of difficult-to-secure ingredients. His creations fly off the menu as quickly as off the plate, but if you have the chance try the lightly seared scallops with blue crab mille feuille in a kaffir lime / sweet pea sauce or yellow fin tuna paired with chorizo sausage and butternut squash. Desserts range from decadent (chocolate cake with an espresso mousse) to delicate (Tahitian vanilla crème brulée.). All are mind boggling. Top wine list, too. Entrees $22-33. 131 Creek Road, Wading River. 744-9200. (Bradbrook, 2/04). [Ap,Ch]

Modern Snack Bar. Home-cooked meals away from home await you at this charming family-run restaurant operating since 1950. Wittmeier brothers' time-honored menu contains dishes too good to go out of style.

Delectable sauerbraten is perfectly tender and the stuffed cabbage very good. Duck breast salad, recently introduced, is another winner. Crab cakes and lobster salad are real treats, but the big surprise is the world-class shrimp and crabmeat quiche. Home-baked desserts are splendid and their take-out pie business is brisk. Wines are mostly limited to local vintages. Reservations not needed, but day or night, it's always a crowded house. Entrees, $9-$17. Rt. 25 Aquebogue. 722-3655. (Bradbrook, 10/4/02). [T]

Red Door. A quintessentially North Fork restaurant: Manhattan-caliber cuisine paired with an ambience of low-key charm. The Mediterranean-influenced American regional menu always offers a panoply of pastas as well as meat and fish dishes. Perhaps their winningest recipe occurred by accident. Ask genial chef / owner Stephen Mazzella for the story behind his remarkable porterhouse pork chop with honey, capers and cayenne. A true instance of luck being the residue of design! Dessert lovers have their vocabulary stretched by such wonders as raspberry crème brulée and Godiva chocolate cake with Tahitian vanilla bean ice cream. Ample wine list. Entrees - $16-$28. 13560 Main Rd., Mattituck. 298-4800. (Trueman-Honey, 12/03). [D]

Scrimshaw. Chef/co-owner Rosa Ross, whose culinary credentials are carved in many a menu from Hong Kong to Italy to Manhattan, brings her latest invention to Greenport. Nestled at the end of Preston's Dock, there are dazzling views of Shelter Island. The slightly crammed dining room is made intimate and warm by sophisticated lighting and subdued music. The menu is full of interesting tastes, starting with excellent duck confit-stuffed spring rolls and hearty fish chowder. Especially good among the eclectic entrees are tamarind lamb shanks with lemon risotto and the supremely comforting seafood in a sweet, tangy kaffir lime coconut broth. Interesting wine list. Preston's Dock (at end of

The Shady Lady Restaurant. The Zorn family's vision of stately elegance comes to the North Fork in this grandly unique dining room. Two rooms actually, with dinner jackets de rigueur in the Scarlet Room and a more casual ambience pervading the lodge-like Pine

Room. The menu keeps apace with the opulence of the surroundings. Chef Ross Essner's cosmopolitan cooking style is globally savvy, but local-ingredient particular. Especially breathtaking is the lobster risotto with diver scallop and asparagus. A superb cheese plate complements the dessert choices and the wines are as excellently-chosen as they are reasonably-priced. 305 North Road, Greenport. 477-4500. Entrees, $28-$38. (Bradbrook, 7/18/03). [A,Cu,Ser,Spe,W]

Stonewall's. Haute cuisine in a tranquil setting, at the Woods Course at Cherry Creek in Riverhead. Step into the warm and inviting dining room, however, and your thoughts will happily shift from golf course to main course. Many superb entrees, including the delicate halibut in a mustard-nut crust, are worth savoring long after the meal has concluded. Duck à l'orange on a bed of wild rice is another standout as is the deeply flavorful lobster bisque. Rigatoni with roasted tomatoes, mozzarella, capers and olives is exquisitely al dente. Fine wines and creatively fruity desserts complete a dining experience par excellence. Entrees $15-$27. 967 Reeves Ave., Riverhead. 506-0777. (Bradbrook, 9/12/03). [Lu,N]

Touch of Venice. Top-notch Italian cuisine in a delightful setting on Mattituck Inlet. Named appropriately for location, cuisine and a large mural dominating the dining room, this is family dining par excellence with a sophisticated ambience. Among the kitchen's highlights: Orient Point oysters, chilled but not icy; baby spinach salad with gorgonzola; black angus porterhouse. Manicotti in a fresh, simple tomato sauce is among the many pleasing pasta dishes. Lobster Meat over angel hair pasta, a frequent special, is an exciting dish of imaginative complexity and one of the North Fork's perennial favorites. Cold seafood bruschetta is another special to watch for. Entrees $16-$34. Wickham Avenue at Matt-A-Mar Marina, Mattituck. 298-5851. (Bradbrook, 8/16/02). [L,O]

Tuscan House. Your table is yours for the evening at this elegant, upscale Italian. Authentic, classical dishes bear the deft touch of chef William Oster. His fish is exceptionally fresh and his osso bucco masterly. But his virtuosity lies in the care with which he pairs his 16 pastas and his sublime sauces. The results range from delicate to intense. Pappardelle with a puree of beans dressed with soppressata, fresh chilies, garlic and parmigiano reggiano is typically adventurous and winning. The dessert tray is filled with excellent choices. Well-chosen wines, emphasis on regional Italians. 673 Osborn Ave., Riverhead. 727-2330. (Bradbrook, 9/7/01). [C,L,P]

Tweed's. Owner Ed Tuccio parlayed his interests in history, Americana and the bison to create this unique eatery. The décor puts one in mind of an expensive turn-of-the-century men's club, but with a romantic twist. Notable appetizers include Oysters Portland, enveloped in sautéed leeks and crisp bacon, and the Bistro Salad, redolent of blue cheese and roasted beets. Aside from Tweed's excellent specialty of the house, succulent farm-raised bison, also recommended are the Sashimi Sesame Tuna, carb-free vegetable lasagna, and Duck Two Ways. Don't skip dessert: the pastry chef is a graduate of the Cordon Bleu in London.

Entrees $19-26. 17 E. Main St., Riverhead. 208-3151. (Trueman-Honey, 7/04/03). [St].

Silvia Lehrer's Cooking Column

Before the frenzied rounds of summer cocktail parties, media events, barbecues and poolside gatherings, quiet little dinners with friends near and dear are like the calm before the storm. There is nothing more gratifying than breaking bread at a small dinner with lively conversation, sharing timely topics and good food and wine. While food is important, it is not always required for the hosts to set forth a dinner that smacks of rounds of hors d'oeuvres and time-consuming dishes. Less is more, and haven't we heard this before?

Everyone has some favorite dishes, perhaps a treasured family recipe, an ethnic specialty or a recipe gleaned from a magazine or newspaper that they would like to share, foods that can be done simply with a minimum of effort – every dish doesn't have to be a tour de force. The following recipes needn't constitute a menu, but individually can be part of the whole. A do-ahead cold summer soup and a no-bake dessert waiting in the fridge can be the start. From there, you might select a quickly prepared baked fish such as local fluke with a delicious mustard crust topping.

Even for those who claim they don't cook, the rewards of a simple meal at a sweetly set table is all about sharing. And remember – food always tastes better with company.

COLD SUGAR SNAP PEA SOUP WITH CRÈME FRAICHE

Everybody loves sugar snap peas – why not in a chilled summer soup!
Serves 6

- 2 large or 3 medium leeks, trimmed and washed well
- 4 scallions, white and light green parts, trimmed and rinsed
- 1 tablespoon unsalted butter
- 2 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
- 1 large Yukon gold potato, about 1/2 pound
- Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper
- 4 cups chicken stock, preferably homemade or low sodium canned
- 1/2 pound sugar snap peas
- 1 cup crème fraiche

Mint leaf garnish, optional

1. Cut the well washed leeks and scallions into thin slices. In a heavy 4-5 quart saucepan melt the butter with the oil. Put in the leek and scallion slices and stir to mix. Cover the vegetables with a square of waxed paper, then cover the pot to "sweat" the vegetables for 7-8 minutes over low heat. Meanwhile, cut the potato into small dice. Remove saucepan cover and discard the waxed paper. Add the potatoes and broth and season to taste with salt and pepper. (Salt judiciously if using canned broth.) Simmer mixture over medium heat about 15 minutes. Add the snap peas and cook 7-8 minutes longer until peas are tender. Taste for salt and pepper and remove from heat.

2. Puree the mixture with a hand immersion blender directly in the saucepan or traditional blender, then put through a strainer to eliminate any pea pod strings. Stir crème fraiche into the soup and refrigerate in a suitable container. Prepare the soup up to 2 days before serving. Serve chilled with a fresh grinding of pepper and julienne of mint leaf garnish, if desired.

FLUKE FILLETS WITH MUSTARD CRUST

Fluke, or summer flounder, is currently running in our local waters. The freshness, the flavor and simplicity of this dish is reason enough to prepare it for dinner tonight.
Serves 4-6

- 4-6 fluke fillets with skin removed, about 6-8 ounces each
- 2-3 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil or melted butter
- Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper
- 1-2 cloves garlic, finely chopped
- Grated rind from one-half lemon
- 1 1/2 tablespoons lemon juice
- 2-3 teaspoons Dijon mustard
- 1 1/2 tablespoons bread crumbs

1. Rinse fillets and pat dry with paper towel. Drizzle oil or butter on the fillets and smooth it down with the back of a spoon. Season with salt and pepper. Place fillets in a shallow baking pan (a 10x15-inch Pyrex lasagna pan works well) just large enough to hold the fish in a single layer and set aside.

2. Mix the remaining ingredients and, with a rubber spatula, pat down equal amounts over the top of each fillet. At this point the fish can be covered lightly with plastic wrap and refrigerated for an hour or two until ready to bake. Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Before cooking, allow fish to sit at room temperature about 20 minutes. When ready to serve, bake about 7-8 minutes or until fish is opaque. Serve hot with sautéed carrots and boiled new potatoes dressed with melted butter and parsley, if desired.

SUMMER BERRY TRIFLE

A delicious way to serve up fresh summer berries.
Serves 8-10

For the lemon syrup

- 1/2 cup water
- 1/2 cup sugar
- Grated rind of 1 lemon
- 3 tablespoons lemon juice

For the trifle

- 1 pint each raspberries, blueberries and strawberries
- 1 (12-ounce) bought pound cake
- Lemon syrup
- 1/2 cup raspberry preserves
- 1 1/4 cup heavy cream, whipped with 2 teaspoons confectioner's sugar

1. Combine lemon syrup ingredients in a small saucepan. Bring to a boil, stirring to dissolve the sugar. Adjust heat and simmer about 10-12 minutes until a light syrup. Watch this procedure carefully.

2. Rinse the raspberries and blueberries quickly under a spray of cool tap water; hull and rinse strawberries. Dry the berries gently in paper towel.

3. Cut pound cake into 1/2-inch slices. Arrange 1/3 slices in bottom of glass trifle bowl and sprinkle with a 3-4 tablespoons lemon syrup. Dollop 1/3 raspberry preserves over the cake then spread to sides of bowl. Arrange one-third of mixed berries over the preserves then one-third of the whipped cream over the berries. Repeat this procedure 2 more times. Cover lightly with plastic wrap and refrigerate for a minimum of 3 hours or up to one day ahead. Garnish with whole strawberries, if desired.

Dining in the Hamptons

Soy-alicious

June is about over, shedding those extra few pounds can make the difference between spending the summer as a bashful Hamptonite, or spending it as a bikini-clad goddess. But what is a gal to do when she's tried everything from the South Beach diet to the Hamptons diet, and nothing seems to work? The answer may well reside in the consumption of soy products.

Soy, an Asiatic leguminous herb, is becoming increasingly trendy among urbans looking for healthy alternatives to anything from greasy potato chips (instead try Gen-Soy's Soy Crisps, or Michael's Soy Protein Chips, both of which come in an array of enjoyable flavors), to fatty ice creams (Soy Dream and Soy Delicious are great substitutes for high cholesterol frozen treats such as Haagen Dazs).

Furthermore, besides the potential weight loss factor involved in a high-soy diet, the health benefits associated with soy seem endless. Extensive studies have shown that if one consumes between 100 and 160 milligrams of soy isoflavones a day (natural nutrients found in soy protein), roughly the equivalent of 3 to 6 servings of traditional soy protein foods such as soy milk or tofu, one may benefit with reduced cholesterol, a more balanced estrogen level (especially handy when PMSing), better prostate health, and more energy, among other things.

However, while most health food products tend to make people cringe, soy can be used to produce a wide variety of luscious foods and drinks, perfectly suitable for quaint Hampton dinners, or fabulous parties. Soy White Russian Milkshakes are ideal for lazy lounging with a little kick.

Soy White Russian Milkshake – Serves 2

Ingredients:

2 ounces of Kahlua

2 ounces vanilla-flavored vodka
1 ounce creme de cacao
2 scoops Soy Delicious Creamy Vanilla ice cream
Toasted sweetened coconut flakes, garnish
Unsweetened cocoa, garnish

Preparation:

In a blender, combine the Kahlua, vodka, creme de cacao, and ice cream. Blend until frothy. Pour into 2 glasses, garnish with the coconut flakes and cocoa and serve immediately.

And while you're sipping your drink, why not try noshing on some Black Soybean Tostizzas? The following recipe is a past winner in the Soy-Cooling Contest at the Ohio State Fair.

Black Soybean Tostizzas

– Yields 8 pizzas

Ingredients:

1 lb large, refrigerated flaky biscuits
1/2 cup chunky salsa
1 cup cooked, diced chicken
1 cup black soybeans, drained
1/4 cup chopped cilantro
1/4 tsp. ground cumin
2 green onions, sliced

1/2 cup each red and green bell pepper, 1-inch strips
1-1/2 cups shredded Colby-Monterey Jack cheese

Preparation:

Heat oven to 350 degrees. Separate biscuit dough into eight portions. Roll each biscuit into a 5 1/2-inch circle on a greased cooking sheet. Set aside. In a medium bowl, combine salsa, chicken, soybeans, cilantro and cumin and mix well. Spread evenly over biscuit circles to within 1/4-inch of edges. Top with onion, red and green pepper strips and cheese. Bake for 15 to 20 minutes or until golden brown. Top with sour cream, guacamole, salsa and more green onions, if desired.

After satisfying your hunger with the tostizzas, Soy Blueberry Muffins are the ideal snack to get you through the rest of your day, and ready for a fun-filled night in the Hamptons.

Blueberry Muffins (2000 Soy Foods Guide) – Yields one dozen

Ingredients:

1-1/2 cups all-purpose flour
1/2 cup soy flour
2 tsp. baking powder
1/2 tsp. salt
2/3 cup light brown sugar
1 tsp. cinnamon
1/4 tsp. ground nutmeg
1 cup vanilla soy milk
2 egg whites
2 Tbs. soybean oil
1/4 cup unsweetened applesauce
1/2 tsp. vanilla
1-1/4 cups blueberries

Preparation:

Heat oven to 375 degrees. You will use the rack just below the oven center. In a large mixing bowl, stir together both types of flour, baking powder, salt, brown sugar, cinnamon and nutmeg. In a small bowl, whisk soy milk, egg whites, oil, applesauce and vanilla. Pour into dry ingredients and stir just until moistened. Gently fold in blueberries. Divide the batter among 12 lightly greased muffin cups. Bake at 375 degrees for 15 to 18 minutes or until a toothpick inserted in the center of a muffin comes out clean. Remove from muffin tin immediately.

However, if soy-filled recipes don't appeal to you, soy pills are widely available. Though they are not as effective for menopausal symptom relief, heart, vaginal tissue, and bone protection, they are widely available for those who are not able to consume the recommended amount of soy in their everyday diet.

Dining in the Hamptons

Chilling Out With Sweet Treats

It is hot. The kids are bored. You still have to fit into your bathing suit come August. No one wants to cook in this heat.

Relax. Have a drink. An icy one. Summer, with its shortage of shade and abundance of fresh fruit, makes this the perfect time to experiment with frozen treats. Making frozen drinks or snacks is a fun, free-for-all type of cooking that requires more experimentation and imagination than know-how and patience. It is a non-committal, non-time-consuming culinary endeavor. It is the here-just-for-the-weekend, hit-the-beaches, and gone-again-on-Monday equivalent to cooking. Frozen treats are the perfect edible accessory to summer.

As things should be during summer, frozen treats are simple. The smoothie is arguably the simplest because it allows you to write your own recipes. Typing "smoothie recipes" into any internet search engine will summon up a plethora of free recipes, which usually are little more than lists of fruit followed by the words "ice" and "blend".

However, if this still proves too contrived for the more spontaneous, or less patient, chefs, you can make up your own recipe on the spot. Instead of throwing it away, take to throwing fruit in the freezer when you notice it going unused after a few days on the counter. Next time you feel like making a smoothie, do not worry about whether the recipe calls for kumquats or currants. Just open your freezer and pick the pre-frozen fruits that suit your fancy. Frozen fruit from the supermarket will work as well. Because freezing does not diminish the food's nutrients, freezing fruits ahead of time is convenient and still healthy. Also, freezing the fruit itself instead of only adding ice provides a better consistency.

How much of what fruits you add together is a matter of time and taste. A few smoothie attempts will tell you whether you are a strawberry-banana-orange or a pineapple-kiwi-cherry person and tell you how much mango is too much. This trial and error approach goes for adding other ingredients as well. A scoop of ice cream can thicken

a smoothie. Yogurt can do the same with fewer calories. Feel free to add as many ingredients to the mix as you want. Then take comfort in the fact that the next and last step is to blend it all together. For this, you can use a blender, food processor, or specific smoothie maker.

Requiring little preparation and little clean-up, apart from washing out the blender, smoothies are fun for anyone to make. When I received a smoothie maker for Christmas, I looked forward to healthy, but sweet, treats. However, even my boyfriend ended up finding space in his diet of meat and fried substances to whip up a smoothie as a late night study snack.

Kids, too, can get culinary this summer. Twenty years before my mother bought me my smoothie maker, she and I made ice pops in our own freezer. We used a Tupperware product that looked like an ice cube tray but indented into long Popsicle shapes instead of cubes. Into this tray we poured whatever juice or lemonade we found in the refrigerator. Plastic sticks shaped like tongue depressors were inserted into the juice and the whole tray was left in the freezer overnight. These popsicles were not only a sweet treat for me as a child, but also a fun activity on a summer day.

Grown ups, I have found, can have just as much frozen fun. Ice cubes cheerfully clinked together in coffee cups, chiming good morning as I walked into work the other day. Then after work at the gym, women around me swapped stories about which TFB (which I learned stood for totally fruity beverage) they each had stocked up on for the weekend. Coconuts, oranges, strawberries, and bananas were all mentioned. Try all and more of these fruits added with a splash of liquor to utilize the full potential of your blender. For these types of smoothies, you may want to reference a recipe book. Elsa Petersen-Schepelern's book Cool Smoothies devotes an entire section to fruity and frozen cocktails, including your basic daiquiri and beyond. It is all about how creative, or lazy, you want to be. But, hey, it's summer; either is fine for freezin.

The World of Cheese

Although food products may not be considered to be among the Seven Wonders of the World, "cheese" is on top of the list in my universe. And when I heard the news through a friend that a cheese shop had opened on Route 114 in Sag Harbor, I was elated. Since my discovery several months ago, I've been visiting regularly.

What better way to learn about different flavored and textured cheeses than to try something different each time? At Cavaniola's Gourmet Cheese Shop, owners Michael and Tracy Cavaniola encourage customers to taste a variety of cheeses. Every time I visit I sample at least two new cheeses from their menu, which includes 150 varieties. I then mark off the cheeses I've tried on the menu and star my favorites. Unfortunately for me, so far I've liked every variety I've sampled.

In order to probe even deeper into the world of cheese, I decided to find out where and how it all began. Cheese dates as far back as 6000 BC when archaeologists discovered cheese that had been made from cow's and goat's milk, then stored in tall jars. According to Egyptian tomb murals dating back to 2000 BC, cheese and butter were stored in skin bags suspended from poles.

It is believed that nomadic tribes from Central Asia also used skin bags to carry milk. It was during this process that fermentation of the milk sugars caused the milk to curdle. The curds would then be drained and salted to provide an alternative source of protein. Cheddar dates back to 1500 AD, Parmesan, 1579 AD, Gorgonzola, 879 AD and Camembert, 1791 AD. Today we have so many variations of cheese and they each differ according to preparation, ingredients and aging.

Each cheese has a distinct taste and may be considered to be bland, creamy, pungent, sharp, salty, buttery, rich, innocuous or lightly delicate. Texture and consistency also help make up its uniqueness. Some cheeses are soft enough to eat with a spoon, while others are hard enough to flake with the touch of a knife (like aged Parmesan). The smell of cheese can also stand out. While some aromas may want to make you run for cover and open all the windows in your house, others exude only a mild aroma. No matter how stinky cheese may be, it's an irresistible indulgence.

Michael Cavaniola

One ounce of cheese provides about 25% of your recommended daily calcium intake. If you're lactose intolerant, you can still put dairy in your diet. Many hard cheeses have little lactose. I basically love anything that has cheese on it, from a grilled cheese sandwich to creamy Brie spread on a thin slice of French bread paired with a buttery glass of Chardonnay. There are so many choices to make and even more recipes to choose from that include the use of cheese.

Back at Cavaniola's Gourmet Cheese Shop, you can also find many local cheeses. Mecox Bay Dairy in Bridgehampton makes a variety of cheeses from cow's and goat's milk. Other specialty items offered include olives, pate, caviar, special dips, sweets (pastries, cupcakes, croissants, pain au chocolate, muffins) and more. Gourmet sandwiches are prepared daily as well. And don't leave without picking up a loaf of crisp French bread baked daily by Tom Cat.

Michael Cavaniola grew up learning about the cheese business through his family, who owned a cheese shop in Ft. Lee, NJ for 20 years. And now we're fortunate to have a place of our own to shop at and find out about the best cheeses in the world. They carry cheeses from Italy and France to Holland, Spain and Switzerland. If you're a lover of cheese, this new spot will keep you coming back for more.

—Kelly Krieger

Dining in the Hamptons

Savanna's restaurant in Southampton is an evening getaway you'll not soon forget, and you'll be left with a desire to return.

Savanna's exudes positive energy from the moment you walk through the front door. Upon my arrival I was greeted with a warm welcome by the hostess Jackie and Savanna's manager Roberto Polesello. I was a bit early and Roberto suggested having a drink at the bar while I waited for my friend Catherine. You can't help but observe the beauty of their grand wooden bar, spacious, antique-white dining room and perfectly set tables. I ordered a glass of Hoffman Grove Chardonnay and chatted for a few minutes with the bartender, Robert, while I settled in.

After a very stressful week, I found myself in an upbeat mood after only a few minutes. I don't know if it was the staff, the attractiveness of the interior, the aroma from the kitchen, or a combination of all three. Whatever the magical mix was, I felt happy to be part of it. The dining room boasts high ceilings with fans, finely-detailed wainscoting and comfortable seating surrounded by full-length windows and French doors. Outside, tiki torches were lit, creating a leisurely atmosphere.

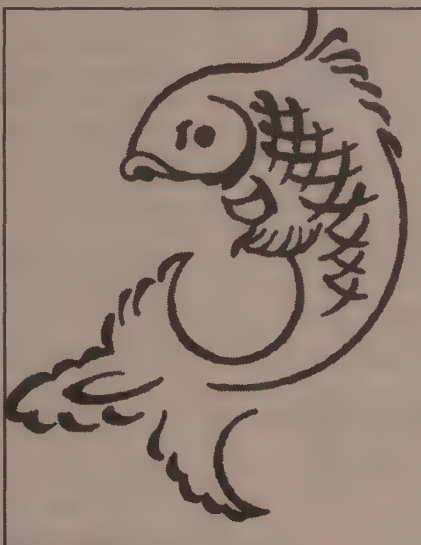

Moments later, Catherine arrived and ordered a glass of Hoffman Grove Sauvignon Blanc. After we filled each other in on the highlights of our day, Roberto escorted us to a cozy table in front of a window. Our waiter Paul introduced himself, wearing a smile that was both welcoming and sincere, and then described the specials of the night. Warm bread and a bottle of sparkling water were delivered to the table. We perused the menu and concluded that everything sounded tempting. When all else fails, the best thing to do is ask for suggestions.

When Paul returned, we both agreed to have him assist us with our selections. For our first course, we decided to share three appetizers. The presentation of each dish was a work of art. First up was the almond crusted goat cheese with jumbo grilled shrimp, spinach, honey, pine nuts and vin santo drizzle. The combination of the warm toasted goat cheese, tender shrimp and fresh spinach created a perfect medley. The shrimp and calamari ceviche with guacamole served on top of a mesclun salad tossed in cumin coriander vinaigrette was refreshing. The blend of a tangy fresh lime dressing mixed with the smoothness of guacamole and crisp greens topped off with tiny rings of calamari was delightful. Our third appetizer was the "crème de la crème." Every Thursday Savanna's has fresh mozzarella flown in from southern Italy and believe me, this is like nothing I've ever tasted. Fresh yellow and red tomatoes surrounded a round ball of the creamiest, most heavenly cheese. I can honestly say that this is the best mozzarella I have ever had. It was so soft and smooth, unlike even the best bocconcini, and tasted as if it should be considered dessert.

Our night could have ended perfectly at this point and we hadn't even gotten to the main entrees yet. One of the specials for the evening was a risotto prepared with truffle oil, mushrooms and garlic topped with fresh shaved Parmesan. Catherine and I had half an order each and that was more than enough. Chef Aldo Cataldo is from Bari, Italy and specializes in making fresh pasta while chef German Lucarelli focuses on fresh fish entrees. Pasta entrees can be ordered in full or half portions (except for the black pepper infused tagliolini with 1 1/4 pound Maine lobster). A few other pasta dishes to take note of include: wheat pappardelle with broccoli rabe, sweet and spicy Italian sausage, grape tomatoes and virgin olive oil, risotto with Atlantic shrimp and mushrooms, scallions and arugula pesto. Before our next course, Paul brought out a dish of refreshing mango and lemon sorbet to cleanse our palates.

For our next entrée, we split the pan-seared Pacific Black Sea Bass accompanied with an apple potato tarragon terrine and French grain mustard sauce. The meat was flaky and melted in our mouths and was matched perfectly with a layered apple and potato for an extra punch of flavor.

Our evening was almost complete and I have to admit, we weren't sure if we could fit another morsel of food in our stomachs, but there's always room for dessert. Roberto brought over two small glasses of Moscato D' Bricco Quaglia La Spinetto (an Italian dessert wine that contains very little alcohol). This was our first time trying this sweet tasting drink and we both loved it. Before we finished our drinks, two desserts were delivered. Catherine and I looked at each other and started laughing because we both knew they looked too inviting to pass up. A banana crème pie topped with meringue, and a warm Toll House tart served with vanilla gelato finished off the evening with a sweet sensation. We'll definitely be back!

—Kelly Krieger

Guy de Fraumeni's Hollywood 1n The Hamptons

Son of a gun! It's absolutely devastating how combative weapons have changed in movieland since I wuz a kid in the Iron Age (post Cro Magnon). Back then, there were flicks in which people wrote with feathers and heroes wielded thin swords which were slashed wickedly by the likes of Captain Blood who, nicely, did not draw any blood – no matter how many blackguards needed to be cut down. Later on, movies got weightier, with the flowering of knighthood and their suits of armor. Alas, however, their double-breasted metal suits and thick, wide swords, maces and battleaxes looked embarrassingly as light as a feather quill. The pen seemed mightier than the sword – Hollywood had discovered plastic. Soon, Tupperware cutlasses, machine guns and cannons made the motion picture even more bloodless. Eventually, the age of unreasonable resinous products was crunched by Heavy Metal and, now clanky, clunky metallic weaponry has reached its destructive zenith starring in The Chronicles of Riddick, alongside the current man of steely (pre Cro-Magnon) power, Vin Diesel as Riddick, the Sci-Fi ass-kicker of the universe,

This asteroids-on-steroids action mix of Hong Kong kick-boxing/ muscle-flexing / interplanetary war in perpetuity is so passionate about its machine shop crafted iron tools of destruction, the audience may almost not think about what they really do. Almost, but not quite. The grisly gristmill daggers, guns, axes, etc. are caressed by David Twohy, who also wrote and directed Pitch Black, the first episode of The Chronicles. The four years between have seen Mr. Diesel grow in stature – popularity and body size – and in performance quality as well. His deep voice is given a humorous tone when he gravely growls the predictable lines in the overly exaggerated style that sets him apart from Schwarzenegger and Stallone. In Pitch Black, Diesel's Riddick had a kinder, softer undertone in his arrogance. Now, his menacing "I'll knock your block off" blockbuster machismo is unalloyed cast iron and the rough mold edges rasped off with sarcasm. His fugitive Riddick is still pursued from planet, to distant planet, hounded by bounty hunters. As powerful as ever and with added visual skill, he can tame a horribly hungry monster. His warring is strictly mercenary, independently for himself. Hear him rumble, "I bow to no one."

The Chronicles of Riddick

Riddick is excruciatingly put to the test by Lord Marshall, played by Colin Feore, a twisted, tyrannical leader of the Necromongers who conquer and convert the people into warrior slaves. Riddick is given the pain of a brain drain and feedback gadget with the added treatment of hanging in a crucifixion manner – at no extra charge. Does he bow? No sir, not even for audience applause for his performance. It also may have been easy for Riddick since the baddies never go too far – to keep the rating PG-13. In a dizzying critical mass (or mess) is a spinning plot of plotting treachery. Conspiracies are as arduous and sweaty as Riddick. Duplicitous wannabes are rampant. Swimming in this swirl of backstabbing is Judi Dench, of all people! She portrays a psychic – so she should have known better. Alexa Davalos swings in fighting from Riddick's past. She dishes out more than she gets. She is bigger and sharper since Pitch Black. However, she, like everyone and everything, including some stunning landscape imagery, is overshadowed by the cutting-edge weapons of war.

They speak louder than my words about these movies.

ART COMMENTARY

By Marion Wolberg Weiss

SUMMER IN THE CITY: HAMPTON ARTISTS IN NEW YORK

Several Manhattan shows this June highlight talented artists who live full or part-time in the Hamptons, and it's always a particular treat to see such exhibits in an urban context. This time it's Chelsea that provides the backdrop for these presentations: a once drab and dilapidated area ironically transposed into a chic gallery milieu.

First stop on our gallery tour is Mitchell Algu's venue, where early feminist themes (late 1960s to mid-1970s) hold court with some intriguing works by local residents Joan Semmel and Eunice Golden. Ms. Semmel's black and white photographs depicting a couple making love seem a far cry from her single female figures of later years. Their search for identity also doesn't appear in these early works. Rather, male - female disconnection is primary.

Ms. Semmel's contact sheet of the lovemaking process has a narrative sense recalling both a photo and cinematic montage. Her later pieces are narrative in nature as well, but work differently, depending on a single image and "off screen" space for their plot.

Ms. Golden's "Study of a Flag" also deals with disconnection, a mighty phallus blasting off like a cruise missile. Its background is patterned with stripes, but not red, white and blue signifying the American flag. Instead, we are a bit confused by the context, seeing no bond between the stripes and the male genitals. Perhaps that's the point.

Next, on to the Florence Lynch Gallery where Christa Maiwald is showing her thread and cotton pieces, her signature materials for quite a long time. Each work shows an aspect of family life, namely her children. What is fascinating is the non - verbal body articulation: gestures, like her daughter's arm and son's hand; their posture; facial expressions; and eye contact. The latter aspect is most telling about her children's thoughts and self - reflections and the fact that they don't look at each other when they are together in one portrait. Disconnection again.

Finally, there's the Metro Pictures Gallery featuring Cindy Sherman. Her clown portraits have been critically lauded, but this critic has reservations about their meaning, which doesn't seem clear. Instead of body articulation like Ms. Maiwald's works, the non-verbal use of objects is most revealing, including a stuffed animal and colored wigs. There must be a point to these photographs (considering the multiple images) but we don't get it.

While Anish Kapoor at the Barbara Gladstone Gallery is not a Hamptons resident, we always find his work provocative, including his latest sculptures (really installations) juxtaposing chrome configurations with the grey concrete floor upon which they sit. Once again, there's the elegant with the drab, just like Chelsea itself.

Cindy Sherman's show at Metro Pictures (519 W. 24th St.) will be on view until June 26. Cindy Sherman's work is also on display at the current exhibit at The Parrish Art Museum in Southampton.

HONORING THE ARTIST: PAUL RESIKA

Life is funny, the way it twists and turns. And offers up coincidences. Of course, some people believe there are no such things as coincidences.

For example, yours truly was visiting Williamsburg a few days ago, doing research on a book about art communities. Conversing with long-time gallery owner Richard Timperio, we learned that he showed emerging as well as established artists like Paul Resika. That very night, we found out that Mr. Resika was going to be this week's cover artist.

This critic couldn't help but marvel at the thought that Mr. Resika exhibited all over the world, including sophisticated Madrid, and yet he often graced the walls of Williamsburg's Sideshow Gallery, a funky, edgy venue with an equally funky, edgy mural covering its exterior walls. The reason behind Mr. Resika's egalitarian demeanor is difficult to pinpoint, but here's how he explains it: "I feel flattered when younger artists ask me to show with them."

We want to suggest another reason. Mr. Resika believes that freedom is the primary goal to strive for in his creative endeavors; it's an idea that creeps into his conversations and in his own aesthetic philosophy. Mr. Resika says it more succinctly: "We are always looking for freedom and not constraint. We are searching our whole life to be free. Isn't that what we want?"

Freedom assumes other configurations for Mr. Resika. For example, he's currently engaged in collaborating with another artist, Varujan Boghosian, a neighbor in Cape Cod where Mr. Resika has spent time since 1947. This working together to create art works obviously delights him, signifying liberation from the more traditional and "purist" kinds of painting that he has always admired and followed.

However, the fact that Mr. Resika misses "the traditional past" is still apparent: he talks about the "great painters who have died" or recalls that he would run "into de Kooning in the morning and Edward Hopper in the afternoon when they all lived near Washington Square Park." There's no hint of name-dropping here, just the recognition that things are not what they once were.

We sense that Mr. Resika will always have a penchant for tradition, for he owes his very essence as an artist to it. His cover piece, "Blessing, 2000," also captures the same idea of handing down customs (blessing of the ships). Mr. Resika can't help but add in his characteristic no-nonsense humor that, "after a while, everyone who had a boat wanted them to be blessed."

While Mr. Resika's attachment to both tradition and freedom is noteworthy and special, we suggest that he has another unique quality: he's an expert at making fun of himself, explaining that he has no brains or wit and that he's self-absorbed like all artists.

We find this attitude commendable, even if Mr. Resika isn't totally serious. No wonder he's respected for his art as well as for his humaneness.

—Marion Wolberg Weiss

Mr. Resika's works will be on view at East Hampton's Vered Gallery from July 11-30.

review: fear and loathing in east hampton

Hunter S. Thompson is a reputed dope fiend, gun toter, peacock breeder, rider of unbelievably fast machines, overseer of sex industry misdeeds, novelist, and most notably, although inseparable from the rest, he is a journalist. He is rambling, poignant, and impossible to ignore with stories told from a perspective all his own. Hunter is the Doctor of Gonzo Journalism. He is its inventor. He is Doctor Gonzo. If you don't know of Thompson and the fear, loathing, and hubris that continue to follow him like the venomous ghosts of psychedelic flashbacks – you should. The man even has his own alter ego, Uncle Duke, in Doonesbury. Figure it out then read on.

I regret to say that Dr. Gonzo does not call, nor has he ever called, the Hamptons his place of residence. Too bad, really. He could shake things up around here. Hunter does, however, make his home in what some might call our winter counterpart for the bourgeoisie targeting another place to descend upon. Or, in this case, ascend. Mr. Thompson lives in, where else, Aspen. His exploits from his compound, called Owl Farm, are well documented in his many books and articles. Thompson's last book, Kingdom of Fear, collects a slew of writings from various sources, including Rolling Stone and The Aspen Times Daily, and among other things, compiles the saga of his run for sheriff of Pitkin County (which includes Aspen) under the "Freak Power" platform.

Right now, at Glenn Horowitz Bookseller in East Hampton, a selection of posters is on view including a number of original posters designed by Hunter S. Thompson for his campaign for sheriff among other things, like pleas to impeach Nixon. Aspen in 1970 was becoming a hot spot for developers looking to take advantage of the ski industry boom. Thompson detested what was happening to his quiet escape from the political bigwigs and fat cat riffraff he wrote against. Some might relate to the terror potential as his home front became Disneyland for the wealthy

Thompson, and shows his occasional underlining on one side. Wall Poster #3 features the image of a massive herd of sheep filling one of Aspen's mountain roads. Below them, the words "Ski Fat City," announce the name Dr. Gonzo promised to change Aspen's to, should he win. It reminds me of a story in Kingdom of Fear, where he finds Judge Clarence Thomas drunk and having crashed his car into one such bloody herd. They go on to a hotel with some ladies of the evening where more insanity ensues. Unforgettable and maybe libelous, Thompson grabs by the throat and forces you into the gory fray.

Also at the show is the original signed silkscreen of Hunter's "Thompson for Sheriff" poster from his personal collection. The image is indicative of the old clenched fist symbolizing black power in the late sixties, which is also represented at the gallery. The key difference between the images is the small green peyote button held in Thompson's fist. It is this reference to psychedelics that represents exactly what brought his campaign down in the end. Hunter's drug use is no secret and never has been. When questioned about it, he refused to stop doing as he does, even while on the job. The much-publicized election drew conservative support for his opposition, and Thompson eventually lost by 500 votes. I'm not sure when the next elections are in the Hamptons, but we'll be waiting for you, Dr. Gonzo.

When you find your way back from Barstow, or the edge of the desert, check out the posters of Hunter S. Thompson, at Glenn Horowitz Bookseller located at 87 Newtown Lane, East Hampton. (631) 324-5511.

and powerful. In response, Hunter started a grass roots campaign to take back the town. First, he sponsored Joe Edwards for the Mayor of Aspen. Running on the Freak Power ticket, the local ski-bum, Edwards, opposed the over-development of Aspen. He lost by six votes. Soon after, with confidence from Edwards' near-win, Thompson ran himself for Sheriff. He spread his campaign propaganda with a self-published political broadside, Aspen Wallposter. Individual issues have become rare. A set of broadside wall posters at Glenn Horowitz comes directly from

review: robert hughes at the parrish art museum

On Saturday, June 19, the Parrish Art Museum hosted one of the most renowned art historians in the world, Robert Hughes. Hughes recently published a 400-page epic on Spanish painter Francisco de Goya y Lucentes. His lecture was a thorough presentation of Goya's life in 18th and 19th century Spain. He analyzed the significance of Goya's work and the inspirations that created it.

He walked onstage with his wooden cane, his red suspenders and an air of wisdom. His black glasses slipped down his nose as he began his talk, his Australian accent commanding the undivided attention of a crowd of about 150. Hughes dove right into the subject matter by showing slides from Goya's beginnings, when he attained respect through his royal paintings. Goya's principal source of work and income was from the Spanish royal family. While some venture to say that Goya satirized them, Hughes presented his opinion that Goya actually respected them, and he demonstrated this through his honest representation. While Goya did not seem to beautify his models, like King Carlos III and his family, he did portray them with an air of honor and power. The blemishes and imperfections he portrayed on their faces somehow only added to their dignity.

But even though Goya was the court painter, he mingled with all of Spanish society in Madrid, and gained inspiration from prostitutes, actors, and intellectuals. He became a witness to 18th century popular culture in Spain, representing the street fairs and the lurid plays. He also began to show his political and personal views as he gained inspiration from the horribly inhumane "madhouses," where he spent much time painting while others,

Hughes explained, passed through to look and laugh at the "looneys." Hughes went on to discuss the personal fears that Goya had of madness, and how it influenced his painting. In fact, Goya had a nervous breakdown in 1793 that left him deaf and isolated. This mental catastrophe became a turning point in Goya's work. The slides that Hughes proceeded to display were strikingly different from Goya's earlier emphasis on portraits. He began to document madhouses and became fascinated by crime. Slides of Goya's paintings of robberies and rapes flashed across the screen as Hughes explained that he had seen from Goya that "our monsters are what we are." He went on to make the daring claim that modern art began with Goya's work in the 1790s.

In 1797, Goya immortalized the Duchess of Alba in one of the sexiest and most provocative paintings of that time. Hughes admitted that there is no way to know whether or not the two had an affair, or whether it was more of a fantasy for Goya, but her commanding presence and womanly form gave her eternal fame as one of the most desirable women. The Duchess of Alba was Goya's favorite female subject.

Goya had not been known as a social rebel, but his series "The Disasters of War" was a raw depiction of the atrocities that occurred during the Spanish War against Napoleon in the early 19th century. He showed the cruelties enacted on both sides. One painting, "Tres de Mayo," is one of the most compassionate wartime paintings ever done. The French executioners comprise an anonymous crowd without facial features, but the Spanish victims are each portrayed with individual personality – each with his own desperate eyes. If this is war propaganda, it is a stand against all wars. There is nothing noble in these deaths; only despair. Goya doesn't romanticize war with patriotic statements. He was there for all of the suffering inflicted on his people and on the French through war, and he is one of our best historic references on the subject.

Hughes peppered his talk with humorous and social commentary pertinent to today's world. He demonstrated how the philosophies and significance of Goya hold meaning in today's society. As he showed the series "The Disasters of War," he quipped about how our countries, the United States and Australia, have something to learn from Goya's brutal representation of foreign occupation.

Hughes punctuated his lecture with wit and humor, but his extensive body of knowledge was certainly the meat of the presentation. He articulately and gracefully squeezed the entire life of a legend into less than two hours. The talk ended dramatically, with one of Goya's last paintings on the screen. In this self-portrait, Goya is seen hobbling on two canes, an old and decrepit man. But at the top of the piece are his words: Aun aprendo – I am still learning. It was thus that Goya concluded his life, that Hughes concluded his lecture, and that I conclude the too-brief summation of both.

–Emily J. Weitz

Robert Hughes appeared at the Parrish Art Museum as a part of the Distinguished Lecture Series: The Creative Life. This series continues on Saturday, July 10 with Klaus Kertess and Jane Freilicher and on Saturday, August 14 with Eric Fischl. Call 283-2118 for more information.

theatre review: rough crossing...by jan silver

In the mood for some silliness – with several good laughs – performed with great panache by six accomplished Broadway actors? This is the summer soufflé director Daniel Gerroll has whipped up with Tom Stoppard's farce Rough Crossing at Sag Harbor's Bay Street Theatre.

Stoppard is the intellectual British playwright of Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead, Jumpers, The Real Thing and Travesties among others. He is also the author of several screenplays, including Shakespeare in Love, Billy Bathgate and Empire of the Sun. Thus, farce is not the first genre one associates with his name.

Rough Crossing is a farce, the comedic form the British are quite good at writing and performing (think Noises Off, for example). But this is farce Stoppard-style, so it is high-brow and low with its double meanings. The action takes place in the 1930s aboard a luxury ship on a transatlantic crossing. Rather than farce's well-timed entrances and exits of compromised characters through slamming doors, there are sliding French doors to posh state-room suites where compromised occupants are attended to by an inebriated steward.

Let's start with the steward, Dvornicek. His Eastern European name is probably Czech-born Stoppard's poke at his own roots, but the steward reminds the other characters of an Irishman – so they often call him Murphy. As played to a straight-faced fare-thee-well by Dylan Baker, Dvornicek is the funniest character in this piece.

The story involves a successful playwrighting team, Turai (Richard Kind) and Gal (Edward Hibbert), bringing their new, unfinished musical to New York. During the ship's voyage, they plan to complete the musical with the composer Adam Adam (Gabriel Olds) and the two leads, Natasha (Christine Ebersole) and Ivor (Tony Roberts). Natasha is engaged to Adam, but Ivor is her former lover.

Richard Kind fills the stage as the frustrated, garrulous Turai, determined to complete his show at any cost. Edward Hibbert is wonderfully unflappable as Turai's often distracted writing partner Gal. Christine Ebersole is luminous as Natasha, and one hears her lilting soprano voice a few times during the show. Tony Roberts is steadfastly earnest as her slightly dim leading man. Add in Dylan Baker's steward, and the six characters together occasionally break into a little song (and dance).

This is the fourth play Daniel Gerroll has directed for Bay Street Theatre. A British-born actor/director working mostly in the States, he has a great ability to interpret highly stylized playwrights such as Stoppard, Coward, Pinter, and Schnitzler for contemporary American audiences. And he has an outstanding production team here.

Michael McGarty's two-level set, enhanced by Brian Nason's attractive lighting, invites the audience into the S.S. Italian Castle's well-appointed interiors. Willa Kim's chic costumes for Natasha and elegant haberdashery for the men add to the luxurious ambience. Andre Previn wrote the music for Rough Crossing when it debuted at Britain's Royal National Theatre almost 20 years ago. Roger Butterley's musical direction for this production is very upbeat, with musical staging by Joyce Chittick and Rick Faugno. Tony Melfa's sound design completes the fine production.

One wishes there was a little more tartness in the fluffy soufflé that is Rough Crossing. Stoppard comes close when he has the steward admonish Turai, "Never surprise a woman. They love surprises as long as they know."

Rough Crossing plays Tuesday through Sunday evenings, with some Wednesday and Saturday late afternoon performances, through July 4. Tickets ($42-54) may be purchased at the theater box office, online at www.baystreet.org or by calling 631-725-9500.

theatre review: you can't take it with you...by gordon and christiano

The Hampton Theatre Company is returning to Quogue to launch their nineteenth summer season with the opening show in the beautifully refurbished Quogue Community Hall, a revival of Moss Hart and George S. Kaufman's American comedy classic, You Can't Take It With You. The play opened on Broadway December 14, 1936, and was an instant critical and popular success, playing 837 performances. In the spring of 1937 it won the Pulitzer Prize and in that same year the film rights were purchased for the unheard-of sum of $200,000. The subsequent film with James Stewart, Jean Arthur, Lionel Barrymore and Spring Byington in the leading roles captured the Academy Award for the Best Picture of 1938.

You Can't Take It With You tells the humorous story of an encounter between the conservative Kirby family and the eccentric characters of Grandpa Martin Vanderhoff's (Stratton Walling) household. In Grandpa Vanderhoff's family of wacky bohemians everyone does exactly as they please. Grandpa, who doesn't believe in income tax, hasn't paid any tax in years and is being visited by an IRS agent, Wilbur Henderson (Christopher Laurence). Grandpa's daughter Penelope Sycamore (Diana Marbury) is writing a play, her husband Paul Sycamore (Stephen Anderson) is building a rocket in the basement with Mr. de Pinna (Allen Fein), their younger daughter Essie (Kristin Alestra) is studying ballet and pirouetting all over the house while her boyfriend Ed Carmichael (Rob Di Sario) plays the xylophone. The Sycamores have a black maid, Rheba (Andrina Smith), whose boyfriend Donald (David Adams) keeps running in and out of the house.

Tony Kirby (Edwin Cahill) is a banker who is courting the Sycamore's eldest daughter Alice (Jessica Roegler), and he comes into this three ring circus atmosphere near the top of the play amidst bursting fireworks, and the two quickly become engaged. They plan a dinner to introduce his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Kirby (Rob Florio and Sarah Hunnewell), to the Sycamore family at Grandpa Vanderhoff's home. But when Tony brings his parents on the wrong night, all sorts of crazy shenanigans ensue that include a drunken actress, Gay Wellington (Garrett McConnell), Essie's ballet instructor, Boris Kolenkhov (Peter Bove), two G-Men (Nick Napolitano and Bill Dexter), and the Grand Duchess from Russia, Olga Katrina (Roberta Cashwell).

The energetic cast seems game to try anything, but they seem to have been given little assistance by the play's director, Jane Stanton, at creating real characters that inhabit the life of the play. With the exception of Mr. Walling's grandpa and Ms.

Marbury's Penelope, none of the actors understand what it means to build an organic moment based on the truth of the text, and even these two could go further. Mrs. Alestra as Essie is also more successful than the rest, but her ballet movements come out of nowhere and exist merely as an attention-getting device, never as Essie making an effort to actually accomplish them. Ms. Roegler as Alice has a lovely quality, but shares little chemistry with Mr. Cahill's Tony. What we get are actors with varying degrees of experience demonstrating by broad parody the naturalistic idea of their respective characters, instead of playing their actions with conviction. The result is a chaotic hodge-podge that, if you are not really paying attention, almost works for the zaniness of the play, but sacrifices the hilarity of its truth in the process.

In all deference to Ms. Stanton, directing such a large cast is an immense challenge, which I understand was complicated by losing two weeks of rehearsal time due to the fine tuning of the Theatre's renovation. It may have been impossible to coax real performances out of the actors given the time constraint. She may have been unable to get such a large cast together at once to rehearse and bring off the madcap overlapping that is necessary for the play. What we get is nicely staged pictures with everyone standing around reacting in the background instead of the frenetic activity of the larger than life screwball characters almost bumping into one another, which the play suggests.

The set by Diana Marbury is appropriately real and charming. The audience I saw the play with on Friday night was having a good time and was most appreciative of everyone's efforts. The play has a timeless appeal that makes it an obvious choice for a production here in the Hamptons. The story is a homage to nonconformity and boasts a moral message to have the courage to do with your life whatever it is you want to do. Follow your bliss, because life is short and money and possessions do not insure happiness. As I was leaving the Theatre I overheard a woman comment, "cute." I think that precisely sums up the evening.

You Can't Take It With You is now playing at the Quogue Community Hall in Quogue Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings at 8:00 and Sunday afternoon at 5:00. For directions or to reserve seats contact the Hampton Theatre Company at 653-8955.

Barry Gordin and Patrick Christiano are theatre critics. Mr. Gordin is an internationally renowned photographer. They can be reached at bg6@verizon.net.

Away At School... By David Lion Rattiner

One Rough Day

So I'm spending this summer in Boston, tied to my apartment lease and my girlfriend. I have decided that for summer work, I would be a real estate agent. After some classes and testing, I got a license and a job.

Being a real estate agent in Boston sounds like it should be kind of fun. You walk around, show people apartments and if they like it, they buy it. They say that you have to be a good salesman in order to be good at the job, but personally, I don't really say anything. Generally, what I say is, "I'm not really sure."

To just about every question a customer asks. "Does the rent include heat and hot water?"

"I'm not really sure, but we can find out when we get back to the office."

I have been at this job for a week, working on Newbury Street. I get a desk and a leather chair, I wear a dress shirt and shoes, I even have a telephone and a card with my name and number on it. It is very James Bond. The main thing that sucks is working on Saturdays, but the job has been going okay. That is, until yesterday.

Yesterday, a client walked in looking for a studio. "Hi, I'm Diana, I'm looking for a studio that's like a thousand a month." She was a young girl, maybe twenty five, and looking to live near Northeastern University. I picked out some apartments, grabbed some keys and off we went. So far, everything was going pretty normal.

We got out to my car and hopped in. "I think that you are going to like this studio." I said. I was feeling proud of myself. It was only my fourth day and already I was saying salesman-ly lines. We walked into the studio, and within ten seconds, she decided that she wanted it.

"Well, I love this place. You should be a happy guy, you just made a sale!"

I was happy. Selling this studio meant that I was going to make close to five hundred bucks. "Well, let's get out of here and sign some papers," I said.

I pulled out my car key, walked with Diana to the elevator, and pushed the elevator button. Then...it happened. My key slipped out of my hand. "Oh $#!T!" The key fell in slow motion, perfectly straight, right through the little crack in the elevator then down into the basement. Suddenly, just like that, I was screwed. I was in a sweat, which was uncomfortable because of my dress clothes. I hit the down button on the elevator and left Diana on the first floor. I headed for the basement.

The basement in this building was like the temple of doom. There were wires hanging from everywhere. My key had fallen all the way down into the elevator shaft, underneath the elevator itself, into a giant pool of water. You've got to be kidding me.

What I needed to do was to get this elevator to go up somehow without me inside of it, then I needed to get the door open and climb down into the shaft, into the water and search for my key. I pushed the

"1" button on the elevator and got out holding the door open. The elevator wouldn't move. I let the door shut and watched as the elevator went up. With all of my might, I yanked at the door, but to no avail. I could not get this door open.

I was turning into a mess. My shirt was undone, I was sweating like a maniac, sparks in the basement were going off, it was awful. I could see that there was a trigger on the door that when pushed in, would make it so the elevator would go up without the door being closed. I pushed in the trigger, then tried again to hit the number "1" on the elevator. I reached into the elevator, my thumb on the trigger and pushed the "1" button, ZAAAAAPP! Like eighty thousand volts ran through my body. I hit the floor. Why is this happening to me? Am I cursed?

"Are you okay?!" Diana yelled from the first floor. "NO I'M NOT OKAY!" I was almost crying.

I gave up and called a locksmith. Diana and I started to walk back towards my office. "Well, look at it this way," Diana started. "I liked the place, you made a sale, things are not so bad."

"I guess you are right."

I started to feel a little better. Yeah, I was sweaty, dirty, elevator greasy, but I made a sale. I looked up at the heavens to thank God for the sale. Then I saw a bird, then saw the poop from the bird come hurling down to the earth onto my face. It was in my eyes, my eyebrows, my shirt, everywhere. I'm taking this as a sign.

NEW KIDS ON THE BLOCK

It's no longer hit or miss when it comes to smart skin care. You need to be concerned with protecting healthy skin and preventing future damage by blending beauty and science. Lori Utter, licensed esthetician and electrologist, of Hamptons Skin Care and Hair Removal, Inc., opened her new private office in the Center for Well Being at 32 Mill Road in Westhampton Beach. "I chose to open a private office so my clients would feel more relaxed when coming for a treatment," said Lori, "and I wanted more time to help them understand better skincare choices." The skincare line of choice at Hamptons Skin Care and Hair Removal, Inc. is SkinCeuticals. Treatments include the use of SkinCeuticals products that are of pure, pharmaceutical grade ingredients with proven scientific results. "Providing quality products backed by science is very important to me," said Lori, "and SkinCeuticals also produces broad-spectrum UVA/UVB sunblocks with transparent zinc oxide that can protect your skin every day."

In addition to facials for the face and back, other services include glycolic peels and photo rejuvenation treatments utilizing the amazing benefits of light therapy to help create a gradual, natural improvement for aging and sun-damaged skin.

And now that summer is here, everyone is concerned with unwanted hair removal. Waxing and electrolysis hair removal treatments are also available. For those of you who would like permanent hair removal results, electrolysis is the only method recognized by the FDA to remove unwanted hair permanently. It is a gradual process of hair removal for both men and women starting as early as the teenage years and is effective for all hair and skin types.

So whether you are looking to schedule hair removal treatments, discover the benefits of photo rejuvenation or enjoy a relaxing facial, you can reach Lori at 631-288-1017.

CLASSIC CARS WITH BOB GELBER

There are presently some good buys in cars, both contemporary and classic. One of my choices would be an old Range Rover. You know, those that were first legally imported to the United States in 1987. These early models are my favorite because they were, visually, the originators of the classic Range Rover look: boxy, lots of glass, and bodywork that sat so high on its chassis that you could see the entire muffler from the rear. Some of these early models sell for as little as $3,000 – genuine bargains. Mechanically, they are very strong machines with their American Buick engines and BMW transmissions. However, with that British origin, there are bound to be electrical gremlins with cockney accents playing havoc when you least expect it. Paint also seems to flake off their aluminum bodies like dandruff, and the rear window over the tailgate is factory guaranteed to rust.

A Classic Land Rover

Then again, the driving experience of a Rover is worth all the petty grief. You sit high and mighty, with the windows so low you had better suck in your potbelly when trying to look cool driving through East Hampton. Just be aware of one simple fact; the repair costs on your $3,000 Range Rover will be the same as those on a new $70,000 model. But you can do the "royal wave" for a small investment with a lot of class.

Another good buy is an old British MG. These MGs are all landmark cars and true classics. The '52 MGTD is the best buy of the lot, mainly because it is visually boring. Its predecessor, the '49 MGTC, is something else all together. With its tall, thin, and spidery wire wheels, it could well have been built in the 1920s. Having owned both a TD and a TC, I have to admit that, as beautiful as the TC was, the TD was a much more pleasant car to drive. The MGTC had probably the worst steering of any car built in 1949. It also had a harsh ride, but that was de rigueur for British iron. Possibly the best compromise of the "T" series of motorcars was the

Another early MG that demands attention is the MGA. Many, including myself, consider it to be one of the most beautiful roadsters of the 50s. The only other mass produced British roadster that has the same visual appeal is the '56 Austin Healy 100, which is worth about twice as much as an MGA. Today, average '56 to '61 MGAs can be bought for between $10,000 and $15,000. MG even produced a delicious looking, rare coupe that is worth less. This MG is blue chip and can only go up in value.

All early Alfa Romeos are undervalued. I really don't know why. To those who really know cars, an Alfa is, basically, a poor man's Ferrari. While in the 50s and 60s, when the British were building sports cars with iron block, push rod farm tractor derived engines, an Alfa left the factory with an all-aluminum double overhead cam jewel of a motor. The great automobile design houses of PininFarina and Bertone are also responsible for many of the classic shapes of the Alfas. The Italian car experience combines beauty with technical sophistication. This can be found in any early Alfa Romeo, from the '56 Gulia Spyder to the '72 GTV coupe. Another real sleeper is a late model GTV-6, if you can find one. Good Alfas can be had from $7,000 up to $20,000.

One of my favorite American cars is the '65 - '66 Ford Mustang fastback coupe. There are quite a lot of them out there. Because of their number, they can be had at the right price - say from somewhere between $8,000 up to $15,000, of course, depending on condition. The one to own is the Mustang with a 289 V-8 and stick. They are crudely built with a primitive chassis, but, when set up right, they are enjoyable rides. If I owned one, screw originality. I would do some fine chassis and engine tuning. I would even consider making it a Shelby GT-350 replica. This is one beautiful piece of American iron that can be modified to a fare-thee-well to terrorize a Porsche 911 at a stoplight. Good Mustangs will always be crowd pleasers.

There are many other good buys out there, too many to include in this brief article. So all you Porsche, Cobra, Mercedes, Austin, Ferrari, Lotus, Maserati, Jaguar, Corvette, DeTomaso, Aston Martin and Osotta Fraschini future owners out there, take heart, and stay tuned until next week. 'Til then, enjoy your ride.

OVER THE RIVER AND THROUGH THE WOODS WITH KEN KINDLER

Big Reed Pond

Just east of Lake Montauk, on the northwest corner of Theodore Roosevelt County Park, there is an adventure awaiting you through what I like to refer to as "Montauk's Rainforest." The Big Reed Pond Nature Trails at Theodore Roosevelt County Park run adjacent to Big Reed Pond and through much of the wetlands that feed it. Every year just as summer begins, I walk these trails so that I can visit the picturesque freshwater ponds, swift running brooks, red maple swamps, the salt marsh and the hardwood forest.

Several years ago, after studying Charles Whalen's Montauk Point Trail Guide (Charles Whalen's maps are available at most East End cycling and outdoors stores, for more information: whalenc@whalen3.com), I decided to set out on an adventure to visit Block Island Sound from the Big Reed Pond trailhead on East Lake Drive. Whalen's map shows a woods road that runs to the isthmus that separates the Sound from Oyster Pond. This is a heavenly destination for anyone who loves the water.

The first time I decided to visit the Sound via the Big Reed Nature Trails, I followed the map furnished by Suffolk County Parks (Suffolk County Parks Administration Office: (631) 854-4949 or Theodore Roosevelt County Park Office: (631) 852-7878), and decided to take the trail that skirts the Pond to the east, and then branches north to the beach. I couldn't find the trail to the beach. Using my compass, I followed several trails headed north towards Shagwong Point, but all of the trails disappeared into the dunes. The dunes are fragile and walking through them, especially where there is no path, unduly stresses them, so I turned back. Luckily, in addition to the County Parks map, I had also brought along Charles Whalen's map of Montauk Point. It showed a trail to an area called "The Songbirds," located right near the Sound. This is the trail that I have become accustomed to using to get to the beach.

Unfortunately, a portion of it was washed away by last winter's storms, and this week, when I walked it again, I found that it now dead-ends on a bluff. I wandered around until I found a route to the beach on a newly built horse trail. By the way, it's good to know that the trails adjacent to Big Reed Pond Park are often used by people on horses. When you encounter equestrians, it's a good idea to greet them and then move off the trail and allow them to pass; the horses may get spooked if you move too quickly and do not give a friendly greeting first.

If you are into adventure and willing to take a risk, I recommend that you give this beach hike a try. If you want a more tame experience, I suggest you obtain a map from Suffolk County Parks and walk the three loop trails. These loop trails are well blazed, the maps are displayed on kiosks throughout the trail system, and they are easy to follow. The trails are each marked with a different color:

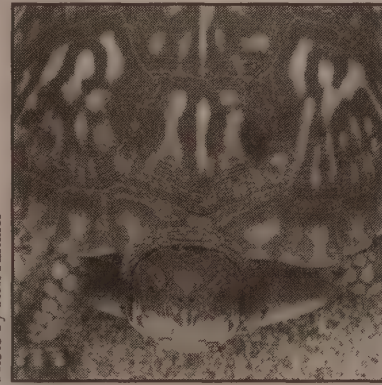

blue, green, and brown. You must hike the blue loop trail in order to get to the green loop trail. You may hike only the blue trail loop if you wish; it is a complete circle that will bring you right back to the trailhead. Approximately halfway around the blue loop trail, you will see where the green loop trail begins. You can take the green loop back to the blue loop, or if you are looking for a longer hike, you can follow the green loop trail to where it intersects with the brown loop trail. The blue loop trail is .9 miles. The green loop trail is .5 miles. The brown loop trail is 1.3 miles.

If you decide to walk all three loops, it's important to know that in order to get back to the trailhead, you must follow the brown loop to the green loop trail and the green loop trail back to the blue loop trail. The blue loop brings you back to the trailhead.

Directions to the Big Reed Pond Nature Trails: Montauk Highway to East Lake Dr. Go north on East Lake Dr. for approximately two miles. The trailhead entrance is on the right. Follow the dirt road to the parking area.

Clippity Clop with Ali Spencer

Clippity Clop debunks myths and clears up the top misconceptions about horses, ponies and horseback riding.

Ponies are baby horses

One of the most popular misconceptions people have is that ponies are baby horses. The truth is, a pony is any adult horse that measures 14.2 hands or less. A "hand" is the unit used to measure a horse. One hand equals four inches. A horse is measured from the ground to the top of his withers, which is a point at the base of the horse's neck. Some breeds, such as the Clydesdale, never come in pony sizes and some, such as the Shetland, are exclusively ponies.

Baby horses are actually called foals. A female foal is called a filly and a male foal is called a colt.

Horses are big, dumb animals

Although some horses are most definitely stupid, as a species horses are very intelligent. They can learn their names and most recognize their owners. And horses have an uncanny ability to find their way home if their riders get lost while out on a trail ride. Furthermore, I have known horses that acted frisky and wild with experienced riders, but were completely calm and slow the minute a beginner or small child got into the saddle. I even had a horse trick me into thinking he was lame to get out of being ridden, which is the horse equivalent of calling in sick. When I began my ride he started limping but when I got off and brought him back into the barn he was perfectly sound.

The horse does all of the work

People often think that horseback riding is easy, and that all the rider has to do is sit there and look pretty. But that is like saying all the driver of a car has to do is sit there. For example, the rider tells the horse what direction to travel in, when to speed up and when to slow down. The rider (hopefully) is the decision maker of the pair. Furthermore, horseback riding is physically as well as mentally challenging. Ask anyone who has just ridden for the first time how he feels the next morning and the answer will most likely be, "I'm barely able to walk." Riders inevitably build very strong leg muscles, and over time will develop stronger arms as well. In addition, riding for one hour can burn anywhere from 250-350 calories.

Horses sleep standing up

In the wild, horses must be ready to run from predators at all times, so they almost never lie down. They sleep standing up, but it is more like dozing instead of good, recuperative sleep. In order to get REM sleep horses must be lying down. And in a secure situation, that's exactly what they do. They either lie flat on their sides or lie on their bellies, legs folded underneath them, noses resting on the ground. I once even witnessed a horse dreaming. She was lying on her side in her stall and her legs were moving as if she were cantering.

All horses kick (aka Horses are dangerous animals)

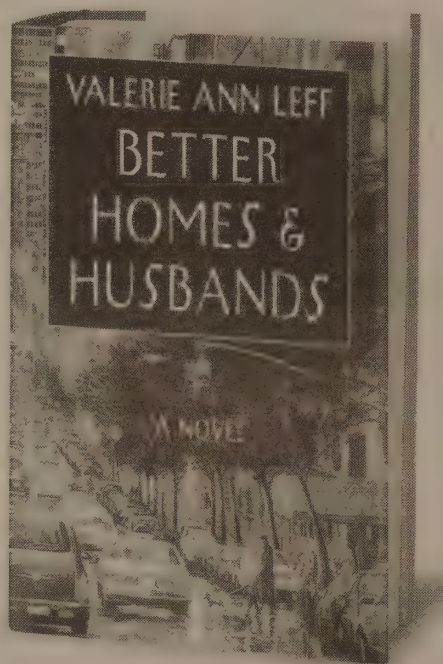

As a child it was drilled into my head never to walk behind a horse in case the horse was to kick out, and I believe that many people have been told the same thing. But the truth is that the majority of horses will only kick out when they feel threatened – if they ever kick out at all. Horses are flight animals, and their first response when they sense danger is to run away. If a person walked behind a horse that is tied up, which many horses in a stable setting are, that person might startle the horse. A horse, unable to run away or see what's behind him, might kick.

Although there are always exceptions to the rule, most horses that bite, kick and otherwise act aggressively have been abused or mistreated by humans. Their first response, when approached or handled by people, is to defend themselves, since they have learned from experience that humans are not to be trusted. But for the most part, horses are gentle and docile animals that are capable of being very affectionate and playful.

The "never walk behind a horse" rule is really just one aspect of the common sense that people should always practice while being around horses. Horses are not aggressive, and don't often purposely harm humans. They are, nevertheless, 1,000 pounds larger than we are, and accidents, ranging from a horse stepping on someone's toes to a horse kicking someone, are bound to happen. When around unfamiliar horses, one should always exercise caution, making sure that the horse is friendly, comfortable, and aware of what is going on around him. If you have little to no experience with horses, it is best to ask someone if a horse is friendly and if it is okay to approach him.

Illuminations by Barbara Jo Howard

How To Get Ripped

I admit it. I have no willpower. Give me a bad day and I will rip open a pint of Haagen Dazs Butter Pecan, down it in one sitting, and beat myself up the next morning.

However, there are people out there who say I shouldn't feel guilty about this self-serving compulsion for instant gratification. Rather, they fault the manufacturers of these hard-to-resist delicacies. In fact, they want to put an end to making goodies like Oreos and Coca Cola easily available to kids.

Charles LaSalle, a fitness model, trainer and founder of the City Gym Boys, shakes his head in disbelief. In his mind, there is no one to blame except the person who is eating too much of a good tasting thing.

Basically, he says that if you are going to eat fast food (or an entire sleeve of Oreos as I am capable of doing), you have to work it off. And, the best way to tackle fat is to burn calories by lifting weights and doing cardiovascular activity. Charles puts in an hour-and-a-half, four to five days a week, and his body is so cut that it could be contender for the cover of Men's Health.

Of course, Charles is an award-winning body builder. However, he is very different from those men with no necks, who have to turn sideways to enter a room. Charles is lean, toned, and has a really impressive "six pack."

What makes Charles particularly special is that he is drug-free in a sport where anything and everything is considered de rigueur as long as it "pumps you up." Even more impressive is that Charles has achieved this growing up in Harlem. He is living proof that a healthy and fit body is earned through discipline. For him there are no short cuts to getting fit, and he has made a mission out of inspiring young people to take responsibility for their bodies.

Seven years ago, he formed the City Gym Boys, a group of Latino and African-American young men who are fit and into the hip-hop scene. Charles and the other City Gym Boys are living examples of how to achieve a toned and fit body without drugs.

Charles is also cognizant of the growing numbers of younger people diagnosed with Type 2 diabetes, high blood pressure and other heart ailments. He knows teens will always eat fast food, so the answer isn't to censor advertising. Rather, Charles believes if teens make working out a habit now, it will help prevent the onset of deadly diseases later.

"Obesity is at an all time high. Kids should spend less time playing video games, and instead hit the gym," he says. "A good time to start is when they turn fifteen. All it takes is forty-five minutes to an hour, three to four times a week."

"No one needs to wear stretch pants," he adds. Charles and his team focus on making workouts cool. The uniform of choice is street clothes, such as a white tee and baggy jeans that are pressed and slung low on the hips.

To educate young people, Charles and the other City Gym Boys have made a video that demonstrates the proper way to lift weights and do reps. It also shows how to get those six pack abs by focusing on specific muscle groups (and doing crunches).

For the past three years, the City Gym Boys have also produced a full-color calendar that is sheer eye candy. They are to fitness what Usher, Fifty Cent and Justin Timberlake are to entertainment.

While his mission is about reaching out to today's youth, Charles makes his living training executives of Fortune 500 companies. He acknowledges that the most difficult part of working out for his clients is making the time. And, that is why he wants young people to start now and make fitness a healthy habit; after all ... "the mind and body are terrible things to waste." And, there will always be a pint of ice cream beckoning.

For more information on the City Gym Boys, visit www.citygymboys.com where you can read their mission, as well purchase the video and calendar.

Dress Up Your Feet

Summer's the time to show off your feet, an admittedly strange ritual, and there are more ways to do it than buying expensive shoes that the heat and sand will eat right through. It can be downright boring just wearing a bikini all day, when in winter you play with layers of soft clothes. Before you start putting on scarves or makeup to go to the beach, try decorating your peds with mehndi, foot jewelry or barefoot sandals. Sounds practical, right? Well, you don't have to go running in them, man, they just make summer heat more bearable. And, as one creepy website proclaimed, "these make toesies look nice."

Mehndi is the art of applying Henna to the skin with a little bag that looks something like a pastry-decorating tube. The art comes from India, Morocco and Pakistan, where the Hawsona shrub grows. You've seen the intricate, filigree designs on palms before, but henna can be applied anywhere, and lasts from 15-20 days. One reason to apply henna to your feet or hands is that henna lasts longer on areas of the body that are warm. The herb paste is applied directly on the skin, and forms a dry layer while the dye seeps in for a few hours. To make the Henna last long on your body, apply a lemon juice and sugar mixture to keep the paste from cracking off. After a few hours, the paste will start cracking off, and you will have a very earthy design on your skin. I would suggest going to one of the many mehndi professionals in Manhattan before trying this yourself; because it won't come off for at least five days no matter how much you rub your skin. They also can create designs for you as you describe it to them, or else they always have hundreds of patterns to choose from, from a large lotus flower to a small arm band. If you are capable, however, many craft stores sell individual kits of powdered henna and design plates.

Another sweet for your feet is the "Barefoot Sandal." I love wearing these on the beach, on the patio, or by the pool. The basic design is a loop attached around your second toe that leads fabric back around your ankle and ties there. It's like a sandal without the sole. Beach brides are sporting them this year as a chic accessory instead of staggering around in the sand like a beached whale. The barefoot sandal is usually decorated with glass beads and is made out of anything from hemp to elastic to fabric to wire. I wouldn't suggest attaching pieces of sharp wire around your feet, but many companies do use it. There are also a lot of disgusting feet on the Internet to fight through before finding a nice website with barefoot sandals, but here are a few that offer unique styles: Foxyfeet.com, Naturalsandalsetc.com, Dosali.com. Prices range from $10-25 per pair. You can make these easily enough by buying waxed thread or bracelet elastic at a craft store (Michaels in Riverhead) and following the line of your foot. Make knots where the beads are going to go so they don't slip, and give yourself extra length to tie around your ankle a few times to look like Helen of Troy. If you can find them, buy beads that jingle and you'll feel like an Indian princess when you walk.

Foot jewelry is always cute as long as there isn't too much glitter involved. Illusions in Sag Harbor is always stocked with cute toe rings or ankle bracelets in the summer. If you're looking for something a little silly, then please check out Footcandy.com. They offer every kind of toe ring imaginable, from the cheap and adorable palm trees and sailboats to diamond rings for that girl with the million dollar feet.

Of course, none of this is going to work if your feet don't look nice. Aveda in Bridgehampton gives many different kinds of pedicure treatments, including the delicious spa pedicure. Style Bar Day Spa (Bay Street, Sag Harbor) is also one of the best, and they have a lot of room to bring your girlfriends. If you don't have the time for all that, the new Ricky's in East Hampton sells a variety of professional tools that will allow you to give yourself a perfect pedicure. They even have those little buffer things than smooth down your nails, and professional "Essie" polish. My favorite is "Fed Up" which looks a little pink, but is mostly natural. "So... why do you buy nail polish," my boyfriend asks, "that makes it look like you have no nail polish on, and even has a color that makes it look like there's no color, instead of using no color? Or no nail polish?" Clearly, dressing up your feet is only for your own pleasure, girls, so have fun.

—Sophie Thall

Beach-Eyes

I recently spent a panicked thirty minutes of my last vacation picking out sunglasses (or "beach-eyes" as I termed them when younger) in a CVS. The day was glaring and my sunglasses were stranded at the hotel. My friend had suggested I buy a cheap pair just for the day. All sunglasses make him look like he belongs in a glossy full-page ad. If I am lucky, once every four years I can find a pair that looks slightly less ridiculous on me than sunglasses normally do. Therefore the revolving drugstore display held little hope, and in the end, defeated and depressed, I chose a pair that cost fifteen dollars, and looked it.

I was spared conviction on the facial fashion faux pas I committed only because the crime occurred far out of Hamptons jurisdiction. Upon my return, I decided to leave behind my life of sunglass sin and spring for a "good" pair. As I had tried to explain to my eye-wear-inclined friend, sunglasses must be an investment for unfortunate people like me. June to September, beach to Main Street, bathing suit to blazer, one wears sunglasses at all times and places. An item receiving that much use should receive equal attention.

When I begged Terry Fields, Store Manager at The Sunglass Hut in Amagansett, for guidance toward the perfect sunglasses, she explained that "personality plays a big part in how they look." The beach-going Amagansett shoppers prefer sporty styles, especially Revos, Oakleys, Arnettes, and Raybans. Atlantic Ave. Beach lifeguard Sara Faraone verifies this with her own pair of Arnettes. On the other hand, the Sunglass Hut in Bridgehampton, surrounded by horse shows and country clubs, sells more Gucci and Chanel glasses.

"Fashion-wise, there's tons of styles, but lenses are really important," Fields explained. The most critical factor in lens selection is UVA/B/C. The last letters stand for, and respectively protect the eye against, Aging, Burning, and Cancer. Remember, sunblock irritates the eyes.

Yet, the most protective lens need not be the darkest one. Polarization, the inclusion of a filter in the glass, can make even clear shades sun safe. Kevin Ahearn, another Atlantic Ave. lifeguard, testifies to the appeal of these protective lenses, saying that lifeguards wear "pretty much anything polarized." Clear shades with polarization also assist elderly people and those with sensitive eyes, for with such lenses the eyes are not straining to see as they would be in dark green lenses. Ultimately, polarization allows lens shade and color to become a matter of personal preference. Green lenses make the world appear overcast while amber ones lend everything a sunny yellow tint. (I was tempted to buy a pair to save for the grayest days of February.) Also popular are the more extravagant colors, from ice blue to amethyst, which dot the Sunglass Hut's walls.

Whichever lenses one chooses, those lenses must be cared for. "Maintenance is key," Field proclaimed. She shuddered at the memories of people wiping their sunglasses with Windex. Saline and alcohol based products are safe for cleaning lens, but solutions containing ammonia, and of course all shirt hems, are not. There is little point in spending several hundred dollars on a pair of sunglasses if one is not willing to pay the $9.99 for the maintenance kit.

Amid all these options, I still wondered if there was any hope of finding frames that fit my face. Thankfully, I discovered some guidelines on which to rely. The shape of the frames should contrast the shape of the face. For example, people with round faces should avoid round frames, although round lenses within square frames will work. The Sunglass Hut's employee manual prescribes specific frame shapes for certain face shapes, but ultimately, Field said, it is 'a matter of trying things on and finding what you like.' Her effort and expertise was evident as she selected three pairs for me. I tried them on. For the first time since I had called them "beach-eyes," I did not recoil in repulsion from my reflection. I did not induce the laughter of fellow shoppers. Grand dreams of confident days on the beach, free of squinting, flooded my mind. Hidden behind the perfectly fitting frames, tears – of joy this time – welled in my eyes.

A Diet to Call Our Own

The Hamptons Diet, a new book by Fred Pescatore, M.D., offers amazing weight loss and Mediterranean Diet health benefits delivered with Hamptons' incomparable style. Intriguing stories of the rich and famous spice up the impressive science. Trying to guess which celebrity he's writing about is becoming the latest Hamptons party game. You'll find a rich menu of foods that satisfy, boost metabolism and build health that until now were only accessible to his famous clients.

After 5 years as the Associate Medical Director of the famed Atkins Center in Manhattan, Dr. Pescatore established his own nutritional medicine practice where he continues to study the latest nutritional science. After 11 years practicing cutting-edge nutritional medicine, he developed The Hamptons Diet – a safe and healthy way to manage your weight.

We asked Dr. Fred about The Hamptons Diet:

The name? "I've loved the Hamptons for decades and have a home here. Many of my patients summer here and it's known for blue skies, fresh-caught fish, and fresh local produce, which make an excellent base for a healthful diet. Also, my clients here were the original guinea pigs for this diet, so it's only fitting I name it after them and a place I love. Besides,

I'm also guessing the publisher wouldn't have been as excited to market The Sheboygan Diet."

Why another diet book? "Because none of the others combine weight loss with a healthy approach to lifetime weight management. They have all missed the point of why people should lower their unhealthy carbohydrate intake – it's more about being healthy to me than it is about weight loss – that's the icing on the cake, if you'll excuse the high-carb analogy."

What's special about The Hamptons Diet? "It is the first diet to provide variety and balance with nutrient-rich real foods in a safe, medically sound program. It is effective for weight loss, reduces cardiovascular risk and improves health. I designed 'pyramids' for proteins and fats. There are 3 pyramids for carbohydrates (one each for fruits, vegetables and grains) to show how foods in each category rank in value.

"I also place strong emphasis on healthy oils because they are crucial to health and very misunderstood. The book is worth buying simply for that breakthrough chapter, which explains this confusing issue in a way everyone can understand. The AHA says that 80% of fat in the diet should be Monounsaturated. The best source I know is macadamia nut oil. It is significantly richer in monos than olive oil and has a much higher (410 degrees) smoke point." (www.macnutoil.com)

The book gives 30 days of meal plans featuring 190 mouthwatering recipes from celebrity chefs – you'll never get bored.

Side effects? "Actually fringe benefits – increased energy, better sleep and elimination of afternoon brown-outs and heartburn for starters. Inflammation, a major factor in allergies, arthritis, asthma and many other conditions, is also reduced.

What about consumers doing "low-carb" without guidance? "Not all low-carb foods are created equal. The Hamptons diet emphasizes real, whole foods like vegetables, fruits and whole grains, not nutrient-depleted and chemical-laden junk foods – even if they are a low-carb variant. Avoid "net" carbs and aim for total carbs when trying to lose weight. There is no such thing as a free ride. Eating pounds of protein and nothing else is not a healthy way to lose weight."

Do calories still count? "Science says that dieters can eat 300+ additional calories on a low carb diet and still lose weight, but not 3,000 more. Calories and exercise count. The Hamptons Diet helps reduce intake without the deprivation that sabotages most diets."

Is "low-carb" a fad? "Absolutely not if we are going to make a dent in the obesity/diabetes/chronic disease epidemic. However, consumers need to know how to cut carbs in a healthy way that they can use for the rest of their lives. That is how the Hamptons diet is devised."

Can everyone do Hamptons? "That's the beauty of it – even endurance athletes and pregnant women and children can find a home in the Hamptons."

Is The Hamptons Diet just for the well-heeled? "Surely you jest. I wrote the book with so many choices and alternatives that no matter what your price range, there is a healthy alternative for anyone. Just keep in mind that a little money spent on health pays dividends with compounded interest – something any Hamptonite should understand."

Fred Pescatore, MD, a general practitioner, heads Partners in Integrative Medicine in Manhattan (www.piimdocs.com). He is undoubtedly the ultimate source for low-carb scientific information. Dr. Pescatore is routinely featured on network television shows, national radio shows and print publications. ## Lawn Mower Man

Now that summer is in full swing, everyone wants to get out there and do their thing. Some people are into the beach, some are into their boats, some are into houses, and some are into their backyards. I'm pretty sure that just about covers everyone. Anyway, today we are going to talk about the backyard and the wonderful adventure of it all. After all, the grass is always greener on the other side, but this summer I don't THINK SO! This summer your grass is going to be greener. The lawn that you are in competition with will bow down before you, praising you and begging you to take care of him over your neighbors. People will stop in the middle of the street to check out your lawn. They will get out of their cars, walk over to you and shake your hand. This is going to be your green thumb summer.

First things first when it comes to the back or front yard, and that is lawn mowers. If you want to have a nice lawn, you've got to have a nice lawn mower. It is just the rule. There is not really anything that you can do about it. Whether you are going to go used or you are going to go ridiculously awesome, a good lawn mower changes everything. Not only does it cut your grass so that it looks attractive, but it also inspires you to get out there and cut it and take care of it. The lawn mower is a symbol of inspiration and seriousness. How you take care of it determines how you take care of your grass.

Obviously, the absolute best thing you can do is get a lawn mower that you can drive around. This makes cutting the grass a hell of a lot easier and usually a lot faster. It is also kind of fun to drive these things around and makes the chore of mowing the lawn into a NASCAR race. There is the loud engine, big tires, tight turns, oh, and of course the grass is getting cut.

The main thing about the drive around lawn-mower is that, well, you get to drive it around. The bad side of the drive around lawnmower is that they are generally too powerful for a twelve-year-old kid to drive, so you are stuck mowing the lawn. If you are interested in getting a drive around lawnmower, you have to check out the John Deere riding lawn mowers 100 series. They really are the way to go. They are reliable and they feature everything that you would want in a riding lawn mower, hooking you up with lawn cutting power of up to 2.5 acres. They start in the $2000 range. You can also look into the X series, which are more powerful. Let's face it, anything with the letter X in front of it means it's pretty cool (X-Men, X-Ray, BMW X series, X-Treme). These ones offer everything imaginable: cruise control, power steering, more horsepower and more lawn cutting power. These guys start in the $8000 range. John Deere is simply the main name in the game when it comes to riding mowers.

Push around mowers are a different story. Black and Decker has come up with some battery powered ones which are pretty cool. They are not as loud as the gas engine ones and are better for the environment, which I am always for. You can also get rear wheel or front wheel drive with these bad boys so you don't need to put in so much effort pushing them around. Both the electric and the gas lawnmowers start at around $500 bucks.

Other outdoor must-haves are Miracle-Gro and a weed whacker. I don't know how Miracle-Gro works except for the fact that it does. It is like giving your lawn some steroids. The lawn gets greener and better faster. It is a great product. Weed whackers are also a must to detail certain parts of the lawn. Lawns, baby! There is so much to it. For $90 you can get the Black and Decker Edge Hog. This thing features 2.25 HP, a high-torque electric motor, 7.5-inch blade diameter; an edging depth of 3 to 1.5 inches. Built-in cord retentions secures extension cord, handle adjustments for right- or left-handed use. I can just see you drooling at the mouth right now. For those of you who are going to lawn war with a neighbor this summer, good luck, God speed, and may the green be with you. -David Rattiner

Bejeweling Your Home

This is house jewelry. If wallpaper and color-splashed walls are the clothing of a house, and carpets and rugs are the shoes, these are the earrings, the necklaces, the cufflinks. The things that hang from the rafters and exposed beams of your house, both inside and out, can add character and flavor to your home. This is particularly desirable if you are renting and you can't add the permanent personal touches like paintings and wallpaper. Instead of tattooing your house with an expensive and long-term coat of paint, pierce its ears with wind chimes. Adorn its limbs with sun catchers. Bejewel your house with the colorful accents that help to make it yours without investing in long-term changes or deep pocket spending.

Wind chimes are a beautiful addition to any outdoor sitting area. They hang from the beams of your house, dangling and dancing in the breeze. But they also add a melody to the movement of the air as they chime. It is so relaxing to fall asleep to the sound of bells ringing with the rhythm of the wind. Add a few wind chimes around the house, all resonating with different pitches, and you have yourself a choir of singers whose song is dictated by the rustling of the trees. Wind chimes sparkle in the sun, adding texture to your outdoor spaces, and their song is heard as a soft accompaniment to your life. Wind chimes are available in metal or hollowed-out bamboo, and the sound varies from bell-like to a more hollow, low whistling sound. You can find the bamboo chimes at Flashbacks on Main Street in Sag Harbor, and there is a great selection of all sorts of wind chimes at www.windchimes.com, where you can actually listen to the sound of the chime before you purchase it.

Birdfeeders notoriously hang from trees, but they are also great hanging from the house itself. This brings our feathered friends even closer for viewing. Birdfeeders not only add texture and interest to the structure itself, but they add the song and beauty of the birds attracted to them. They can hang on the porch or at the front doorway, and are available in a variety of styles. There are the long, clear cylinders, called tube feeders, that the birds flutter up to or the actual houses that, ideally, they nest in. There are also window feeders that actually suction on to the glass, bringing the birds right up to the house. This is more than just ornamentation – this is the kind of gift that keeps on giving! There is a great selection of bird feeders at Wild Bird Crossing in Bridgehampton Commons.

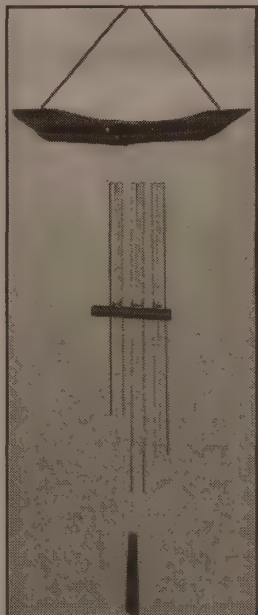

For a more strictly ornamental addition to your home, try the swirling sun catchers that hang like jewels from the house. They allow the light from the sun to dance on the surface of your deck or porch as it refracts through the colorful plastic or glass. These beautiful adornments are absolutely useless, but they do provide the function of attractiveness. They are easy to put up, needing just a string or wire, and they are easy to transport. They add color and interest to your home, and remain completely temporary. They are available in the sort of corkscrew swirl that endlessly spirals downwards in the breeze. They can also be found as simple sun catchers with pretty designs dangling from cords. They are available at Kites of the Harbor on Main Street in Sag Harbor, and range in price from $12-$27.

The addition of hanging plants is a great way to liven up the upper part of your field of vision. You can buy them with the hangers at many farm stands out here, or you can make your own macramé "plant hammock." This adds color and life to an otherwise empty area. When you're looking at a house from the outside, this kind of accent looks beautiful. It can add random splashes of color that draw the eye.

Your house may be well painted and well furnished, but that doesn't mean it's well adorned. Hanging additions give a house style and texture. It's nice to have the shoes; it's great to have the clothes. But just as you add flavor to your own look by accessorizing, you can add flare to your home by bestowing it with a few unnecessary but beautiful jewels. It's the place you open your eyes to every morning and it's the voice that lulls you to sleep every night – give it some flare from head to foot, ceiling to floor.

Make An Entrance

Be it formal or casual, it is the entry way to your home. It can be as exciting, dramatic or serene as you are. The choice of colors, lighting, furniture, and accessories set the mood and reflect the personality of the home owner.

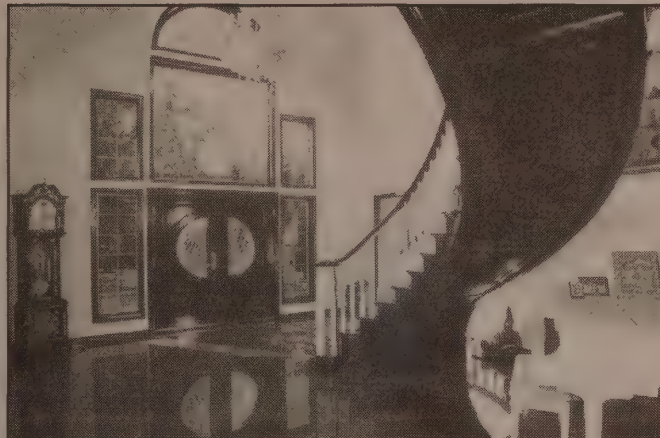

For starters, think about who will be using the entryway the most. If you use it primarily when entertaining guests, you will be more formal than when it's the main entrance and exit for a busy family on the run. That also influences the choice of flooring. Elegant tile and marble set a beautiful tone for a formal foyer. Patterned floors in wood, tile or paint on wood add interest or distinction. Rugs and carpets create softness and texture underfoot. Degree of difficulty for keeping the area clean is also a concern.

Decorators favor adding color next, starting with a color pulled from the design palette of the rest of the home. Dramatic navy and burgundy have stood the test of time. Yellow and sage are popular today. Textured wall coverings and faux finishes can play an important role here.

Consider your lighting, from lamps and sconces to chandeliers. Chandeliers come in styles to complement any design while adding importance to two-story foyers or an entry by the stairs. Look for a distinctive single table lamp or pair of them for a console table with artwork hanging above. The lamps draw the eye to the artwork as well as light up the accessories displayed on the table. Be sure to use dimmer switches and vary the light levels for different events and occasions.

Add in the furniture, either functional or decorative. One main piece of furniture can anchor the entry way. A signature table, an antique or a fabulous find will do the trick. A chest provides both display space and a place to hide keys. A console table suits a narrow area and the space below the table can be used for additional display. A round table centered in the foyer is another choice. The only limiting factor is matching the size of the table selected to the size of the room while allowing for comfortable foot traffic in and out. In a small space, a shelf can replace a console table or chest.

There's no place better for finding that special furniture piece that defines the foyer than the East End. Montauk Highway, from Eastport to Montauk, is lined with antique shops, charity thrift shops and collectibles emporiums (i.e. used stuff). Don't forget to detour into the village of Southampton. Whether your budget is a mere pittance for an item to be refinished or tens of thousands of dollars for an antique with a provenance, there's a vast array to choose from. For the hardier shopper, just look in the paper for yard sales. You may be able to beat the dealers to your heart's delight.

Accessories and plants transform the space into a personal statement. Display what you love to collect. Hang pictures. Display family photos on walls or tables. Place plants in corners. Built-in ledges or shelves can break up walls and make use of the top fourth of walls. These can be accessorized with silk greenery, urns and pictures. Mirrors framed to match the décor add a sense of space and sparkle to the entry and allow a last minute hair and makeup check.

If the main entry is directly into the living room, think about using a folding floor screen to create a small transitional area. Here's a fun idea for an apartment door opening onto a long, dark hall: Mount a mirror and muntin bars to the inside of the door to create a faux French door. It adds light and a sense of space.

Perhaps you are fortunate enough to have a hall or entry closet in the foyer. An organizing system can prevent creating chaos while being available for guest coats and jackets.

This can be as simple as baskets and boxes to organize belongings. It can be as complex as a custom designed closet system. No closet? An attractive row of peg hooks can be decorated to complement your design scheme. Perhaps you could create an entry way from the hallway and take advantage of unused space by adding recessed shelves in the area between studs. This would create a handy attractive area for accessories and baskets for organizing library books, shoes, lunch bags and more.

In Your Own Backyard

The 2004 Summer Olympics may soon draw you to the television for some exciting sports action. But when it's 75 degrees and sunny, with mild humidity and no wind, do you really want to stay inside? While the international athletes on screen strive for the gold, you can rouse up some friendly competition of your own outside. If you don't have a swimming pool, basketball court, or even a softball field like Jerry Seinfeld, no worries. A little simplicity and creativity are all you need for a more interactive sports experience in your backyard.

Get a net. Plenty of East End sports stores sell nets of all sizes. While you are there, pick up that volleyball nearby and any type of racquet and ball collection – you'd be surprised what you can pull off with a simple paddleball set. Your local hardware store should have lawn paint that is eco friendly and easy to use. Otherwise, sand, flour, towels, and tape are suitable for creating boundary lines. All you need is something that is lawn-friendly, and unlikely to trip your feet or crush under them. For fun, throw away any rules or regulations that pertain to boundaries. If you draw a few circles in your court, they can be required serving locations or count as an extra point if struck. Boundary related or not, feel free to eliminate traditional rules of play and add bizarre ones for awkward twists (i.e. you have to do a pushup or jumping jack immediately after hitting the ball). Remember, it's your backyard.

For more organized and personal competition, create a tournament bracket of two-player teams. For more intense competition and potential glory, buy a trophy or prize that the winner(s) will receive. This increases the number of teams or potential rivals, and gives the individual more of a chance to deliver an impressively terrific, or amusingly horrific, performance.

If you choose not to use a net, there are several other backyard sports your friends and family will enjoy. One classic is whiffle ball. Like ping pong to tennis, whiffle ball is baseball's gentler, simpler cousin. The hollow bat and ball produce harmless hits and pitches that won't jet out of your backyard. You can play the traditional way with fielders, runners, and bases, or you can try an alternative method. For instance, set up distance markers (like a golf driving range) that read "Single," "Double," "Triple," and "Home Run." You can arrange it so that each player gets a set number of swings and must drive in as many runs as possible.

If you prefer something more active, here's a one-on-one or two-on-two version my brother and I invented when young. Eliminate the "Single" distance marker, add two foul lines, and don't worry about bases. The pitcher and fielder can turn any hit that does not pass the "Double" marker into an out by throwing it at a target within a specific time. For example, if I hit a line drive, I count aloud to four ("One-Mississippi, Two-Mississippi" and so forth) while my brother and his friend attempt to take the ball and hit the helmet behind our home plate. If he misses the target or does not hit it in time, I have a ghost runner on first. If he is right on target, then I'm out. We played that each batter gets two outs per inning. But remember, it is your backyard.

Croquet is another game for people of all ages and sizes. It may not be that intense, but neither is golf, and golf can get pretty competitive. Distance between wickets is not the only obstacle, remember. Grab some sticks, rocks, shoes, piles of sand, and other items for some added physical challenge. Think the opposite of feng shui when designing. You can use yard paint, flour, etc to create circles or paths that delete a turn if infiltrated.

If you are careful enough, and have the energy to run around like an idiot, you can use the croquet mallets and ball to emulate a local tradition – only without the equines. Two-on-two or three-on-three horseless polo is a sophisticatedly silly game you know you want to try. You can set up the goals with yard paint, flour etc, or sticks, stones etc, as the goal markers. But remember to be mindful of those powerful poles in your hand when you swipe away at the ball. Installing a possession or point penalty for high sticking is a simple way to ensure safety.

Of course, these are only a few sports that you can start up in your own territory. If you take a little time and think outside the box, you'd be surprised at what you can concoct. Get creative and keep it simple for some exciting backyard Olympics of your own.

A Hole In One, Poolside

Golfers of all ages and skill levels will be happy to know that during those times when they can't make it to the golf course, or don't have access to an indoor/outdoor putting green, there is still a way that they can practice their stroke while enjoying the backyard pool. This interesting variation on the traditional putting green takes the form of a new pool toy, which is essentially a flotation device shaped like a putting green, and is a fun way to learn the game of golf or practice your swing, all without ever having to get into the water.

There are several floating greens available on the market today, varying in quality and the number of features that they offer. At their most basic, these devices are constructed of soft foam of various sizes and feature a three-hole island with golf flag and pole, tee-off pad, a golf club, and several soft golf balls. These are what might be considered the "entry-level" variety of putting greens, with little to no add-ons such as sand traps or realistic-looking turf.

On the other end of the spectrum are the more expensive, attractive-looking, feature-laden versions that look so much like a real golf course green that you won't mind displaying them in your pool. One of these products is called Aqua-Golf®.

Aqua-Golf uses a 3' x 5' floating laminate of artificial turf and foam that is contoured to have the look and feel of a golf course green. The colorful 4" x 5" nylon is attached to the green with Velcro®, which makes changing pin locations easy. There are twelve floating Wiffle® practice balls, which come in four different colors for easy player identification, and each ball has Velcro strips bonded to it to allow the ball to stay on the green. The balls are chipped from an 18" x 24" artificial grass mat that can be placed on the poolside deck.

The Aqua-Golf floating green comes with its own sand trap and the user can move the pin to offer some variation when playing alone or with a group. The lightweight balls are safe and can be retrieved with a skimmer net or emptied from the skimmer basket at a later time. A golf club is not included with the product, so you will have to use your own club. The game is suitable for poolside gatherings, parties, or to use just by yourself. It is made in the US, UV protected, and chemically friendly. The whole set folds away for easy storage, and with the proper care should last for many years.

The idea behind Aqua-Golf came about in the fall of 1996 when its inventor, Dean Peabody, a building contractor, was installing a deck around a in-ground swimming pool. During lunch he would chip golf balls into a floating inner tube.

The inner tube was soon replaced by a 3' x 5' kidney-shaped floating piece of foam. This worked very well, except that the balls wouldn't stick to the green. In addition, the use of real golf balls presented a potential hazard around people and windows. After much trial and error, the solution finally arrived in the form of Velcro-covered Wiffle balls, and a suitable floating green, which allowed the Velcro to stick to the surface of the green. A flag was added along with a chipping mat to chip from the edge of the deck and the game was finally complete.

Initially, the production of the Aqua-Golf putting green took place in the family garage, with the Velcro being hand-wrapped around the balls in a spare room of the house. Brother James Court, a Franciscan Brothers Development Center located in Springfield, IL, was hired to take over production and soon several other development centers were producing the hand-wrapped Velcro-covered balls with Brother James Court being responsible for placing all the components in a package to be made ready for shipping. The product has shipped to every state and to many parts of the world. Now you, too, can enjoy one of the most exciting shots in golf: hitting a golf ball over water to an island green! Maybe you'll get a hole in one. And after a hard game, you can always refresh yourself by taking a nice dip in the pool. Maybe not getting to the golf course isn't so bad after all. The only thing you have to worry about is where you put your club!

The Perfect House Gift

I love to be the bearer of gifts. I can't explain why or when it started, but I've always enjoyed buying for others. Maybe it's the expression on their faces, or the quick pick-me-up they get, or just the satisfaction of knowing that you made someone's day with the perfect gift. I'm not talking about holiday or birthday gifts; I'm referring to basic everyday gifts.

I was taught that it's polite to bring a present of some sort when visiting family or friends because it's proper etiquette when someone invites you to a gathering. I've become very creative with gifts, but the one thing that truly draws me to making my purchase is the packaging. Everything is visual, and presentation makes for the perfect ensemble.

A bottle of wine is not the only thing you can muster up when visiting your best friend or Aunt Millie. Nowadays, candles are a big hit with everyone. There are so many companies that offer a variety of scents and sizes. One of my favorite brands is Votivo candles, which retail for approximately $30. Votivo candles will burn up to 50 hours and come in many aromatic scents such as jasmine, lilac, gardenia, Moroccan fig, Tibetan lily, red currant, teak and celadon tea, clean crisp white and sea island grapefruit. These are a few of their newest scents. Votivo also offers a line of candles packaged in French jars, as well as an array of aromatic room sprays. Yankee Candles in the Bridgehampton Commons carries an abundance of scents as well that can be paired with porcelain tops and decorative votive holders.

Williams Sonoma offers a wide variety of gadgets and food products. Why not bring some margarita mix, chips and salsa for everyone to enjoy? Loaves and Fishes, located on Main Street in Bridgehampton, is a great place to shop for a variety of cookbooks, kitchen, BBQ and other miscellaneous cooking gadgets. Coffee table books, a favorite novel or short story offer another route. On the East End, check out Paradise Books, Canio's Books or BookHampton in Sag Harbor (BookHampton is also located on Main Street in East Hampton and Southampton).

During the summer months, a fresh cut flower arrangement will brighten any home. Add a tasteful vase and you're all set. A beautiful potted plant or potted herb window box may be another option.

Baked goods arranged in a decorative basket or ornate gift bag with a bright color tissue or satin ribbon is a great idea. Whether you purchase the treats from your favorite bakery or decide to roll up your sleeves and bake something at home, it makes a nice presentation. Bates, Citarella and the Blue Duck Bakery in Southampton are just a few options.

Did you say board games? What a great idea. This is a gift that can actually be utilized that very same night. Some of the more popular games include Cranium, Apples to Apples, Scrabble, Pictionary, Rummy Tile, Battle of the Sexes, Imagine If, Jenga Truth or Dare, Senior Moments, Scattergories, and Trivial Pursuit.

If you're attending a party with children, virtually any form of toy will be appreciated. Frisbees, blow-up toys for the pool, water guns, twister etc. Stevenson's Toy Store in Southampton offers a wide variety of creative choices.

Music will always liven up any party. Many of my friends enjoy sharing their favorite music. Create a CD with a special assortment of great hits from your personal collection. There are obviously many decisions to make when purchasing a gift for someone special or just an acquaintance. These are just a few suggestions that may help you along the way.

You Want Me To Do WHAT With THAT?

When I became old enough to eat solid food, I was introduced to the holy trinity that would change my life forever: the fork, the knife, and the spoon. As a young boy eager to fill my mouth with tasty morsels as quickly, economically, and, of course, politely as possible, I embraced these tools. I became accustomed to seeing the three on the table, but as I grew, I noticed they were, in fact, increasing in number. Suddenly a second fork appeared at my place setting and then, making matters more confusing, a third. There were steak knives, soup spoons, oyster forks, grape scissors, corn-cob-holders, and sugar tongs. By the age of nine, I was so inundated with utensils I couldn't tell if we were having dinner or if someone had dismantled the station wagon on the dining room table. I would sit and stare in amazement at the metallic array that was spread across the linen tablecloth until someone else picked up the first utensil.

Years later, I was allowed to enter the kitchen and cook. I had finally become comfortable deciphering the difference between an oyster fork (approximately six inches long and half-an-inch wide at the prongs) and a fruit fork (wide handle, narrow neck, parallel prongs), when a whole new array of obscure and intimidating utensils appeared from inside the drawers. Slowly, I began to understand the uses of these as well and came to realize that even the most awkward contraption had been designed to make my life easier, not more complicated.

Many of the tools I discovered were seasonal. As summer utensils go, corn-on-the-cob holders (rumored to have been invented by Nat Spunberg over seventy years ago) and lobster crackers are the most obvious. In the beginning lobsters were cracked with rocks and hammers, but civility changed that. Can you see people wielding small boulders and hammers at Le Palm? Conscientious diners put down their mallets and picked up handheld nutcrackers. These crackers were gradually improved and tapered toward the sole purpose of breaking lobster shells and now come in several sizes and styles, but the basic principle is the same.

If you love corn but you've lost your corn-on-the-cob holders or are sick of burning your fingers on the cob, the Corn Kernel Remover is the ideal tool for getting that sweet tasting goodness and keeping your fingertips intact. The remover is a simple device with a trough, a set blade and movable teeth across it. The corn slides along the trough while the blade cuts the kernels off row by row. It takes all the work out of preparing corn and frees you from the embarrassment of ferociously noshing on the cob.

Melon Ballers are a fantastically easy way to prepare fruit. Their design resembles a miniature ice cream scooper. As the name implies, it forms fruit and vegetables into little aesthetically pleasing balls. It also is very useful for hollowing mushroom caps and cherry tomatoes, but for the real aficionado there is actually a tool for just that purpose. The Tomato Corer or "Tomato Shark," as it is known, is distinguished from the baller by one distinct trait, the jagged teeth that surround the rim of the scoop.

Nothing is worse than biting into a fresh cherry in a fruit salad only to chip a tooth on the pit, except perhaps having one of your guests do it. The Cherry Pitter is a portable and easily handled way to solve the problem. Although it looks like a stapler, it works much like a hole puncher. The cherry (it also works with olives) is placed in the cradle on the bottom and pressure is applied to the plunger on top. Like magic, the pit is removed and trips to the dentist are avoided.

Now at the height of strawberry season, another useful device is the Strawberry Huller. The squat tweezer-like instrument easily plucks the stem and leaves from the strawberry in one fell swoop without harming the delicate fruit.

Zests and strips of citrus fruit are great for garnishing and recipes alike and there is one tool that does them both. Resembling a miniature bottle opener with five tiny holes on the top, the Zester makes quick work of an orange or lemon peel, giving a splash of color and tang to everything you cook and drink. The trick is to avoid extracting the bitter white pith by not cutting too deeply.

Inventors have gone to extraordinary lengths in order to make preparing and presenting food as simple as possible. These time-saving utensils are useful to have around, but if your kitchen is lacking in culinary gadgetry, the fork, the knife, and the spoon will usually cut the mustard.

The Garden At Rock Cottage by Lance Brilliantine

Southampton Rose Society's Annual Rose Show

If you are like me, you can easily be "transported" to paradise by the sight and smell of a single rose. How astonished I was to visit the Southampton Rose Society's Annual Rose Show held on Saturday, June 19th, 2004, at the Rogers Memorial Library, 91 Coopers Farm Road, Southampton, NY. What a splendid display of roses! Not only were the competing roses of the best substance and colors I have seen, but I also discovered another of the "best-kept secrets" of the Hamptons: the Society's idyllic rose garden. At least as beckoning as the roses was the hospitality extended to me by the Society members who hosted the show!

The Southampton Rose Society (SRS) is an affiliate of the American Rose Society and serves Suffolk County with information, education, and the promotion of roses. SRS encourages hobbyists and assists in rose growing. It conducts monthly meetings as well as field trips and garden tours, and provides individual consultation and fellowship to rose hobbyists.

As part of its work, and as a gift to the village of Southampton, SRS created, and maintains, the rose garden at the Library site. The garden displays a remarkable array of roses that have been grown from bare root stock (It is amazing how well the roses have grown. The garden was recently planted.) In preparing the site, SRS cultivated the soil to a depth of six feet to ensure the right the memorials that remember "now gone" loved ones. In my mind, a visit to the garden, and a donation to help maintain it, seem a "must" for everyone visiting the Hamptons this summer.

The roses attest to the fact that the garden's soil richly supports the substance of blooms, the quality of the leaves, and the fragrance of the roses. Among those roses displayed in the garden, my favorites included:

- "Royal Sunset" – a large-flowered climbing rose with red petals and succulent fragrance,

- "Iceberg" – a white floribunda with a lemony center and a light, rose-lemon scent

- "Love and Peace" – a large, hybrid tea rose of great substance, colored rose-red and yellow,

- "Pristine" – large flowered, with creamy-white petals and edges brushed pink: exquisite,

- "Folklore" – a hybrid tea rose with a high center and tangerine color,

- "Barbra Streisand" – a hybrid tea rose with a lovely rose-lilac color, and

- "Medallion" – a hybrid tea rose of light, creamy-salmon color, and pink brushed edges.

I equally enjoyed the rose competition held in the Library. There was a series of tables displaying cut roses in bud vases. The vivid display presented virtually every color, size, and form. Roses soil/drainage/nutrition for roses.

The garden offers a great variety of roses. There are climbers, hybrid teas, grandifloras, miniatures, and old-garden roses that just beg admiration. In addition to the beautiful roses, the garden boasts a gazebo, benches, rose arbors, and a variety of memorial plaques and bricks. I spent a good hour strolling along the path, gulping in the wonderful fragrance, viewing the blooms, and reading were submitted by SRS members who are eligible to compete, and judged in terms of form, color, leaf, and substance. Prizes were awarded for the best in each class. Form has to do with the way petals are organized. Colors can be single, bi-color, multi-color, blended, striped, or hand-painted. Shape of the rose can be globular, open-cupped, quartered, flat, rosette, pompon, and high-centered. Petal substance is dependent on the amount of starch in the petals that are capable of retaining moisture. The more starch, the better the rose will sustain exposure to high garden temperatures. This helps the rose stand up to the elements and last longer before drooping.

I was particularly intrigued by one rose that won first prize in its class. It is so new that it is still unclassified. The rose was named "Neptune." This large-flowered hybrid tea rose boasted a mauve-lilac color and had a simply intoxicating fragrance – just magnificent. I cannot wait to get one for my garden.

On a separate note, it is interesting that throughout its history, the rose has played an important role in virtually every walk of life. It is the symbol of love, and has appeared as the emblem to some of the world's most powerful and influential families. One need only look to Shakespeare to see hundreds of allusions to the rose. In recognition of the rose's rich history, the U.S. Congress selected the rose as the national floral emblem for the United States in 1986.

If, like me, you have an affection and enthusiasm for growing and/or showing roses, you are invited to become an SRS member. Membership is $35 per year for an individual, $60 per year for a dual membership, and $100 for patron membership. To enroll, contact the Southampton Rose Society, P.O. Box 1022, Southampton, NY 11969-1022.

On Saturday, June 26th, the Southampton Rose Society will host its annual garden tour fundraiser from 10 am until 2 pm. To join the tour and see some great rose gardens, meet on the grounds of the Rogers Memorial Library, 91 Coopers Farm Road, Southampton. Price for the tour is $25 for members and $50 for non-members. Contact number for information is 631-287-4881.

I thoroughly enjoyed attending this year's Rose Show, and cannot wait for the next event on June 26th. Needless to say, my SRS membership has already been submitted. Surely, the SRS Rose Garden will become one of the stops for my guests over the summer. It has my highest recommendation as a great place to visit in the Hamptons!

And It Stained Me

With the USGA Tournament in town this past week, many commuters found themselves rising earlier with the hopes of beating some of the anticipated traffic. To keep awake during this bumper-to-bumper crunch that extra cup of coffee for the road seemed like a great idea. But you know how it is, we forget to put the lid back on the cup or we stop short and with no Fore! Warning, there goes the coffee, hooking and slicing its way straight down the fairway of what was, a short moment ago, a clean, pristine, white shirt. We are now not only stuck in traffic but our clothing is stained – talk about being teed off – this situation is worse than a double bogey!

What can we do? Coffee is a tannin stain but we did not expect that it would leave a tan in our clothes. The main thing is to take quick action. The longer you wait the worse the stain becomes. It is times like these that having paper towels, tissues and that bottled water or club soda you carry with you on hot, humid days may serve double duty. You will keep hydrated and save that white shirt of yours by blotting the stain and then applying cool water. Rubbing vigorously or wringing will worsen the stain by spreading it. When treating the stain, it is always best to work from the outer edges towards the center. This contains the stain and prevents rings.

If you ran out of your house forgetting your water, as a last resort try saliva.

When and if you are able to get to a restaurant, do not try washing out the stain with soap and water. This may be great on your hands, but soap and coffee are not compatible and the stain will find a permanent residence on your shirt.

A fast, easy action for the stain would be to blot it, rinse with cold water, wash with detergent and air dry. The use of dryers as well as ironing will actually cause the stain to become set into the fabric.

Know what kinds of fabric you are dealing with. Coffee is water soluble and most water soluble spills onto a washable garment will come out when washed with detergent after soaking the garment in cold water. A stain-removing paste can be made by using a combination of white vinegar and non-iodized salt or baking soda and water. Apply the paste to the stain by wiping gently. Baking soda and white vinegar serve as bleaches. Clothing that needs dry cleaning you can treat by using a dry cleaning solvent. Take it to your dry cleaners after you apply a mixture of vinegar and warm water. One teaspoon of white vinegar to a quart of water is recommended. Check out www.acemedate.net for more information.

Another thing to consider when treating coffee stains is what you put in your coffee. According to the University of Missouri's Extension website (www.muextension.Missouri.edu), if your coffee contains cream it must be treated as a combination stain, since coffee is water soluble and the cream tends to be more of a grease stain. For a coffee/cream combination stain, use a pre treatment stain remover product by saturating the stained area. Wait for a minute and wash as usual. Plain coffee lovers can soak the garment for about 15 minutes with a solution of 1 quart lukewarm water, half teaspoon of liquid dishwashing detergent and one tablespoon of white vinegar.

So the next time you spill your coffee you will no longer have to feel as if you've putted yourself into a rough. You will be in the swing of things, armed with these stain-removing reminders.

Address the stain as soon as possible. The quicker you do so the less likely the coffee will leave its permanent mark upon your white shirt. Keep cool. Cool water works better than hot.

Be clothing smart. Know what materials your clothes are made out of. Then you know what you are dealing with and what methods work best for the fabric stained. Reading manufacturers' labels and pre-testing can save you lots of time and money in dry cleaning bills. Avoid rings by working from the outer edges of the stain into the center.

Remember, a good follow-through on your coffee stains is truly par for the course.

Refining Your Stereo's Sound

Everyone needs a stereo system. It remains the most essential home entertainment item. Without it, the party is not jumping for your guests, the mood is not polished for wooing that certain someone, or other unfortunate scenarios take place. But are you using it to its greatest potential? How do you know that the music is its most crisp and clear? Should you go out and buy the most expensive system available and kick that old stereo to the side? Possibly, but there are several procedures you can follow (no matter the size, brand, or quality of the system) that will make some recognizable improvement.

First, the system components need a place to rest. Mike from Crescendo Designs in Southampton said it is important to isolate the equipment as much as possible. You can achieve this by purchasing racks with suspension systems that help your components "float." If you cannot afford such an item, there are other ways. For starters, do not rest your CD player on top of your tape deck or vice versa because the vents need to "breathe."

Experts recommend placing your system on top of a metal stand because of its weight and density. While wood cabinets and shelves may seem like attractive places of rest, they actually reflect a large portion of your speakers' sound, restrict ventilation and cable and wire access, and cannot control vibration that well. Controlling vibration, like metal stands do, is important because less vibration equals less muffled sound. Sorbo gel pieces are other items that embrace the base of large speakers and reduce vibration, and are recommended by Mike. If you prefer wood, however, the best choice is an "open-air" cabinet that has no doors, sides or backs. The lack of walls that would interfere with the sound allows your stereo to breathe and provides more mobility for cables and wires.

Once the main body is set up, it is time to work with the speakers. Line the stereo system and speakers against the longest wall in the room. Coordinating the system in a corner traps sound, making it difficult for your ears to pinpoint separate instruments and voices. Large speakers should be positioned about six to ten feet apart.

Any less, and the sound can be cramped. Any more, and the aesthetic center image is lost while the sound becomes thinner. Some speakers come with spikes that, especially if placed on a rug, are crucial in controlling vibration.

If you have small speakers, they only need to be about two to three feet apart. However, make sure the tops of them are about 30 to 40 inches above the floor – the sound from small speakers is stifled when on the ground. No matter what the size of your speakers, make sure they are 12 to 18 inches away from the rear and side walls. Bass fans can move the speakers a little bit closer to the wall, but remember that this will sacrifice depth and muffle the sound.

In a rectangular room, according to our expert at Crescendo, you may want to move large speakers even further from the wall. A more square room has more reflection, which is bad because it leads to "standing waves" of sound that do not resonate well. Mike recommends defeating this problem by placing furniture or hanging paintings nearby (but not on top) to break up the sound waves and force them to move around the room.

With the speakers and components now in place, you must consider the wires and cables. Avoid entanglement at all costs. When one wire is wrapped up in another, the electric signals interfere with the original sound and cause extra static in your speaker. Make sure that your analog cables (those wires with either red and white or red and yellow nodes at the end) are not interweaving, either. Although they may not hinder your sound, tangled cables increase the risk of fire or electric shock and, over time, can damage your system.

Now that everything is in place, it is time to take it for a test run. Place a couch or seat about six feet away from the midpoint between speakers. This is known as the "listening zone." If the music sounds stifled, bring the speakers out a tad more from the wall. If you do not hear any surround sound effect, spread them further out.

Little changes, depending on the layout of your room, can make a huge difference. It is worth a few hours of planning and testing. Move furniture around to experiment with differences and keep a mental log of what works best. With the right tweaking, you can set up the right system to enjoy your sound.

Reclaiming Your Lost Lawn Space

See if this scenario sounds familiar.

You're in your mid-to-late fifties (or sixties). You have a husband (or a wife), and a child (or children). Years ago, you bought a house on the East End. You installed a playground (or a jungle gym) in your backyard (or front yard) at the demand of your child (or children). He (or she, or they) enjoyed use of it for a month (or so), then tired of it. You got him (or her, or them) a Discman (or Gameboy, or Wrangler). Years passed, the children grew, and the property value appreciated. But the playground remained. Moss invaded. Termites settled. You now have a sandy, gravelly enclosure of some fifty square yards taking up cobweb-ridden space on your lawn. And you don't know what to do with it.

If this is you, then take heart; you're not alone, and you're not without options. I got the template for this set of criteria from my parents, my siblings, and the swing set that sits rotting in our backyard. It has sat there and rotted for several years, collecting brown leaves at its feet each fall and bowing under the weight of snow each winter. And this summer, we're turning it into a vegetable garden. Or a horseshoe pit.

We haven't decided which because the area lends itself well to both. It is essentially a large, oblong box, about four inches deep, filled in with a rough, grainy soil that used to be sand. It is bordered by railroad ties, and it measures about 20 ft. by 10 ft.

While this is too small for a regulation horseshoe court with two stakes (which must be no less than 46 feet apart, according to the rules of the National Horseshoe Pitching Association), it is ample space for a pit (the 3 ft. by 3 ft. sandbox around the stake), a little buffer space, and a backboard (a one foot high protective boundary around the back of the pit, which deflects overthrown horseshoes). With this half-court set-up, you can easily pitch your horseshoes from a level area in your yard that is in line with the stake.

To convert your children's old jungle gym into this adult playground, begin by disposing of the rickety remains of the former structure. Then, rake whatever moss, grass, or stones have built up in the area where you will place the pit. A backboard can be fashioned around the pit with a little chicken-wire, and official horseshoes can be bought in many models from a variety of manufacturers whose contact information is listed at horseshoepitching.com. The only other item you may need is more sand for the pit, as most of the original sand from your playground has likely eroded. But I don't need to tell you where to find that.

To turn your barren, decaying sand pit into a fruit-bearing garden, professional chef and amateur gardener Deena Chafetz recommends that you begin by doing the opposite: removing sand. Though vegetables will grow upon rocky, sandy earth if it is covered by about six inches of good topsoil, removing the top layers of sand will allow you to ensure that the garden bed is deep enough to hold that amount.

It will also enable you to reinforce the inside of the borders of your soon-to-be-garden.

"If the area you're going to be growing in is bordered by railroad ties, then there's some concern about material from them leeching into the soil and affecting the plants," says Chafetz. "I used cinderblock borders. You might want to make your bed two or three deep, so it's a little taller than the railroad tie."

After the bad soil and rocks are cleared, fill in the remaining pit with the soil you will use to grow your vegetables. Chafetz uses a mix of compost, peat moss, and horse vermiculite that is recommended by gardening guru Mel Bartholomew — whose method for creating high yields in small spaces is detailed in his book, Square Foot Gardening. The vermiculite and peat are easily picked up at any landscaping or garden store, and the compost you can simply get by gathering leaves, grass clippings, and twigs.

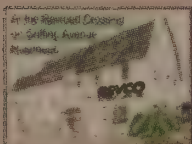

"The leaves fall down," says Chafetz, "and become beautiful, fertile soil. You don't need chemical fertilizers. Organic growing is better for the environment, for the plants, and for yourself."

In this way, something that was once a site of waste and decay can become a place of cyclical renewal and regeneration. Or, a site for pitching horseshoes, should you so chose. —Matt Stevenson

Stinky, Smelly, Wonderful Things

Many years ago, on my first trip to the Caribbean, I was struck with the smell that hit me as soon as I stepped out the door of the plane. The scent of tropical flowers, mixed with heat and sea air, hit me right in the face. The strange and intoxicating scent instantly introduced my senses to Jamaica and the smells of the West Indies. And, every now and then when I sniff candle, lotion or flowers with a tropical scent, I enjoy a moment of sweet déjà vu. This is why they make candles, essential oils, and bath products with names like Hibiscus, Island Orchid or Tropical Rain.

In the past few years, the practice of making things smell good has become quite a business. It seems everywhere you go it has become chic to have scents enhance the atmosphere. You see it not only in homes but in shops and restaurants as well. And, it is no longer just perfumes and colognes but candles, oils, lotions, potpourri, room sprays, bath and hair products, and incense that are designed for the purpose of enjoyment, relaxation and allure. Teas with herbs, such as Chamomile, are meant to soothe and relax. Coffees with rich aromas of chocolate, nut blends, and vanilla send people in droves to the ever popular coffee shops that have popped up everywhere. Mixes of herbs and flowers fill the air with a potpourri of scents.

Candles that once simply set the mood now can create whatever atmosphere one is hoping achieve. Baked Apple and Pumpkin Spice can burn in the kitchen as if you are baking. There is even a scent named Ocean to bring the beach inside. The floral scents like Jasmine, Gardenia and Rose can transport your garden into your bedroom or bath. There are also scents to ring in the holidays like Bayberry, Cranberry and Pine.

This weekend, while shopping for my new home, I was in the Jamesport Country Store where I sampled the smells of a wide variety of Yankee Candles. Yankee Candle, the candle connoisseurs, make just about every scent you can think of from Patchouli to Cookie Dough. Pier One in both Riverhead and Southampton also carry a wide array of scented "everything." Back to Bali in Sag Harbor sells scented bath crystals by the scoop, and the entire store smells of a new incense each time you go in. Their Grapefruit crystals are great for a clean, fresh feel.

Aroma therapy treatments are offered at most spas. Estheticians use scented oils to create a peaceful and tranquil state of mind, and relaxation for the body. Many companies or spas have started making an aroma therapy line designed to relieve stress – such as products containing Sandalwood that are thought to have calming properties. Ylang-ylang is meant to lift the spirits and arouse the senses. Eucalyptus is known for its clarifying and calming effects. Many East End spas offer aroma therapy treatments like Special Effects in Greenport and Gurney's Spa in Montauk.

Just this morning, I was reminded that summer was here when I could smell the lavender already in bloom as I took my morning walk. Lavender can be turned upside down and dried in a bunch for a lasting scent that becomes concentrated at the end of the buds and will give off a fresh, clean, after shave-like smell for months.

This past week, a business associate was in from the Midwest and had never been to a seaside town. He stayed in Montauk because he couldn't find a room nearer to the Open. When I called to see how he was enjoying his stay in Montauk, he told me that what he was struck with was the scent of flowers, salt air and the ocean that hit him as soon as he stepped out of his car. He said he had never experienced anything quite like it. I know that scent well. I thought to myself, maybe we should bottle that smell too and simply call it "Montauk".

Hostess (Or Host) With The Mostess (Or Most)

Numerous books have been written. Songs have been sung. Movies directed and produced...on being the perfect host or hostess. In truth, it boils down to a splash of common sense, three parts preparation and a dash of the golden rule: Do unto others as you would have them do unto you. The tricky part is translating this maxim to your home. Turning your residence into a respite not only you enjoy, but your guests feel right at (dare I say) home, can be difficult.

Most of what it takes to be an ideal host or hostess relates to being a good guest. The art of making your guests feel welcome starts at the front door and often ends in the kitchen, with a few minor detours along the way:

Accept gifts graciously. Sure, it might not be something you'd give to the dead, but accepting an awful, what-could-I-possibly-do-with-this-gift with grace is the mark of a consummate host. There is no rule that says you have to use it, eat it, or even keep it. Just accept lavishly and move on.

Create a welcome surprise for your house guests. Greet summer house guests with a basket of pleasures - Start a guest's visit with a treat... a basket of artfully arranged beauty care items are sure to welcome a houseguest as warmly as a bouquet. Everyone likes to try new products, and suggestions include scrubs, shower/bath gels, soaps, buffers, scented candles and more.

You can make your guests' lives easier by helping them pack light by having extra beach towels and related items on hand. Nothing takes up valuable luggage space like having to bring your own towels. Sure, it might mean an extra load or three, but in the end your guests will appreciate the extra room they'll have for packing Hamptons essentials - those two extra pair of flip-flops, three baby T's, four two-ply cashmere sweaters, golf clubs...

Make sure you stock up on beverages. Besides the usual summer suspects (vodka, gin, rum, tequila, campari) for whipping up the season's liquid pleasures, don't forget the accoutrements - olives for martinis, onions for Gibsons, maraschino cherries just because, lots of lemons, limes and fresh fruit to make the positively appetizing that much more appealing. So, too, for flat and sparkling water flavored with fruit and/or mint. And remember sunshine tea mixed with homemade lemonade and sweetened au natural with farm-stand honey. It's also the perfect opportunity to introduce your guests to the plentiful vineyard offerings as well as some fine South Fork brew.

Everyone likes to nip and nibble and the East End offers some of the best tidbits around. From local lettuces, tomatoes and herbs for creating masterful salads, peas, ears of corn to complement bar-b-ques, berries galore, asparagus, farm fresh eggs for farm-style breakfasts to the local catch. Why miss out? Treating your guests to the local bounty is a wonderful and thoughtful treat.

Condiments and carbs count. What's a burger without a bun or a hot dog without relish? Or heaven forbid...pesto and nothing to put it over? Make sure you have on hand those items - ketchup, mayonnaise, jelly, jams, cream cheese, butter, olive oil, paprika, milk, half and half, capers, sugar (sugar substitute for the di-harders), bread stuffs (bagels, muffins, rolls), peanut butter, marshmallows, cheese, fruit juices and chocolate - that often spell the difference between success and having to run out right before the feasting begins.

Sometimes Mother Nature's idea of great weather doesn't always mesh with your vision of sunshine and cloudless skies. In this case, it's a good strategy to have a few tricks up your sleeve to keep guests busy. For instance, timeless treasures like checkers, chess and backgammon to Monopoly, Scrabble or Trivial Pursuit are great games with which to pass the time.

Police Blotter

Anonymous Ashes Ignite Curiosity. An East Hampton resident reported finding unrecognized coals in her fireplace to police. This discovery led her to believe some uninvited guest was having their way with her hearth.

"Do Gooder" Rouses Suspicion. Ah, the times we live in where a man, without being asked to do so, mows the lawn for a female neighbor and is considered suspect. While reported to authorities, the woman has not pressed charges.

Allergic To Reason? Drinks ordered at The Point in Montauk renders man senseless. Go figure! Upon refusing to pay for his libations, the man was asked to leave. This he refused, too. According to bar employees, Mr. One-Too-Many proceeded to break a glass picture frame to make his point. Which was...drunk!

Pot Thieves. A Noyac resident filed a police report concerning missing pot. It appears that a large clay pot used for planting vanished from his home.

Culinary Calamity At Montauk Eatery. Dissatisfaction over the quality of a dining experience fuels dispute at a popular restaurant. After exchanging words with both the manager and owner, the displeased diners ditched without paying. The incident was reported to police, who upon finding the guests at their motel persuaded them to cough up the cash.

When Inhibitions Run Wild... In the case of an attempted "pick up" gone awry, a youth picks up an arrest. His attempts to "woo" a young woman from a car she was sitting in with a male friend parked near the Amagansett Mobil station failed, leading to a heated exchange. According to police reports, the woman's friend got into an argument with the rabid Romeo who raised his shirt to reveal a gun and said, "I'm going to shoot you." However, after making the threat, he fled the scene but was picked up later when a car matching the description of the one he left in was spied on Montauk Highway. While a gun was not found on either his person or car, he was charged with the misdemeanor of second degree menacing and driving while intoxicated.

Coming Back for Seconds Lands Pair in the Pokey. It started with an offer to do yard work for hire. It ended with a hundred and fifty dollar forged check. Apparently after the job was completed and paid for, the occupant noticed a blank check was missing from its book. The homeowner suspected "the obvious" and reported her suspicions to East Hampton Town Police. Talk about bum luck...Shortly after police finished writing the report and left the Springs home, the pair returned, offering to do more yard work. A quick phone call to authorities and the pair was arrested a short distance from the home. At headquarters, they confessed to stealing the check and cashing it at a local retailer.

What Is It They Say About Money and A...? If it's too good to be true...then it's too good indeed. According to Southampton Police reports, a Shinnecock Hills woman was scammed. After receiving numerous calls claiming she won a sweepstakes valued at $250,000, the caller explained in order to receive the prize she had to send in $2,400...which...believe it or not...she did. A few days later, she received another call, this time assuring her that she had won the Publisher's Clearing House sweepstakes and, of course, would need to send in five grand to receive a prize of $500,000. The lights clicked on and the woman called police, but not immediately. She hoped the winnings would soon arrive and when they didn't...

Can't Count On Contessa

Dear Dan,

I want you to know, that each year for the past seven years that I've been a Manhattanite venturing out to East Hampton the one and ONLY thing that I look so forward to every summer is my morning coffee at The Barefoot Contessa.

I wake up early as the sun is starting to creep up and I can just smell what the inside of that beautiful red brick and white wooded cavern on Main Street is like. I start to get excited at the thought of getting there before anyone else does and getting the softest chocolate chip muffin to go with my coffee. How I enjoy buying the paper and sitting outside the store with my coffee and muffin watching the other die hard-Hampton-goers that are awake as early as I am. How I enjoy that even more than seeing the beauty of say, an Ava Gardner or Humphrey Bogart! I love watching the dogs wait, panting outside of Barefoot waiting for their faithful owners to bring them just a "bit" of croissant or scrumptious cake, only to be disappointed when he or she engulfs every last morsel themselves...

So, my first three-hour drive out east was on Memorial Day weekend. I told all my friends that they couldn't reach me Saturday morning between 8 and 10 a.m., as I will be at my favorite spot in the world and I won't want to be bothered. I grabbed my dog as the sunlight was growing in the sky and hopped in my car. I could feel the excitement. As I was driving down Main Street, about to make a left at Cole Haan, which wasn't yet opened, I saw the red brick building next to the bank. I was literally salivating. I saw the doors opened and what looked like painters going in and out of it. I thought, "eh hungry painters, working hard on a Saturday morning. Painters with great taste for the best coffee in the world." I parked my car across the street, making sure I was perfectly in the white-lined allotted space. I fit my blazer comfortably between a BMW and a Mercedes that housed a license plate that read, "HampToned". I thought, "Ah, I had arrived." Grabbed my pooch in her little bag and galloped across the street, rather, skipped.

Then I saw the most frightening thing I have seen in a year. An empty Barefoot Contessa. The broken glass on the floor was in concert with my now broken heart. I felt like a little kid in line at a candy store. But, after waiting months to arrive at the candy store I finally get to the front of the line and the cash register lady tells me "sorry we're closed." I walk away like my little friend just took her ball and went home. Was this just a "theory?"

Like I've lost my child, I'm hyper vigilant, perhaps I am in the wrong place? I scramble around some more looking left and right. "Where's my baby? Where's my baby?" With my tail between my legs I ask an older man sitting with a coffee from the antagonistic Citarella. A.K.A Cruella. He confirms my worst fear. "Barefoot Contessa is no longer here." He sees the immediate disappointment on my face. "Ma'am, you ok?" I couldn't even respond. My dog rested her head on the inside of her little pooch bag as if utterly defeated. Where will I go now, I thought? Panino Guisto on Hudson and Perry Streets in Manhattan? The paper wasn't even worth reading today anymore. The sun had miraculously hidden its rays behind a cloud. It knew how I felt. East Hampton just wasn't East Hampton anymore without The Bare. It was now, simply just bare.

I had to say goodbye to "The world's most beautiful animal." Help me Ina.

Vinessa's Law

Dear Dan,

Please pass this on to everyone you know across America. Vinessa Hoera is the daughter of our friends Tim and Donna (North High Alumni). She was a beautiful young mother and childhood friend of our children Patrick and Shannon. She was kidnapped on her way to pick up her son, from her job in Westhampton Beach, NY. She was missing for two months and found, brutally murdered, in the woods outside a nearby soccer field. An illegal Guatemalan coworker is in custody.

Illegal Immigration is a huge problem on Long Island and in America. I am not talking about immigrants who come here through the proper channels, as our ancestors did. I am talking about the ones who sneak across our borders. Many of them are ruthless criminals living among us, as we have sadly found out. The recent murders of the children in Maryland is just another example of how brutal they can be. The police there had never seen the likes of this brutality, in all their years, and yet many, even our law enforcement turn a blind eye. While the people who employ them may believe they are saving money, they, and we, are paying a much higher price, if you look at the big picture. Mohamed Atta, the 9/11 terrorist was pulled over by police more than once. This illegal person, in our country, could have been foiled if his immigration status was available to local law enforcement and if our laws, already in place, were enforced. Vinessa Hoera would also be alive today, to see her son grow up and realize her dreams. Please, please contact your local legislators www.fairus.org and support the enforcement of our immigration laws. And please pass this on to all on your email address books.

Thank you.

Let's Set A Date

Dear Dan,

I came across an article promoting Villa Maria Siena of Watermill. The date of the showcase was Saturday, June 29th...could it be that it was last year's article? Otherwise can you please tell me if they'll be holding a showcase in Watermill or any other place on the East End?

Thank you.

Real Estates by Diane Strecker

Transfers:

Just closed in Dune Alpin is the highest priced private home that has ever sold in that community. The home, with magnificent sunset views, went very near the $2 million selling price and was sold by Devlin McNiff in East Hampton. Broker Stuart Epstein says that "business couldn't be better." The former Madison Avenue executive told me that he has recently waged a new advertising campaign that challenges the "big guys" recently taking over local business. Epstein feels that his small business approach and ultra-savvy East End specialists, hand-picked carefully by the agency, make the difference. He went on to say that they have rented more summer homes this season than they ever have. The broker feels that the conglomerates that have moved into the area have not hurt his business a bit.

WCI Communities, a national real estate developer, named America's Best Builder in 2004 by the National Association of Home Builders and Builders Magazine, has expanded its horizons to Long Island. The development mogul recently acquired Spectrum Communities here on the Island, where they currently control 1700 lots. WCI caters to second home buyers (40% of them this year, cash buyers) and vacation properties that are priced up to $10 million. Many of their properties have included boat slips, golf, tennis and other recreational facilities. The company now owns and controls approximately 14,000 acres of developable land in the Northeast.

On the Market:

A Shelter Island Chateau on 2.5 acres sits on the tip of Little Ram Island and offers 240 degree views and ultimate privacy. Little Ram Island juts out and away from the already secluded Shelter Island, connected only by a short causeway. The European-style chateau has 6 bedrooms, 5 baths, professional kitchen, free form pool and permits in place for a deep water dock. It is listed with Allan M Schneider Associates on Shelter Island at $6,750,000.

In the Georgica area of East Hampton on Jericho Close, a 3 bedroom home on a peaceful acre can be had in the prestigious area for just under $3 million. It is listed with Devlin McNiff in East Hampton.

More on the golf properties sold "Open style." Bruce Zabriski, golf professional and US Open player who got his start as a caddy at Southampton Golf Club as a teenager, comes home to Shinnecock this week to promote the property in Florida, where he is Director of Golf. Hosting events in a rented mansion on Great Plains Road in Southampton, Zabriski, once hand picked by Donald Trump as head golf professional at Trump International Golf Club, entertained big name golf celebs. He offered them a look at the newly developed Old Palm Golf Club in Palm Beach. The luxurious 4700 - 6500 sq ft golf estates contain all a golfer could possibly want at $1.4 million to $2.1 million. The Southampton native entertained his peers Hamptons style in the 14 bedroom mansion with luncheons, receptions and presentations related to his new venture.

Fox Hill Golf Club at the Bluffs in Baiting Hollow also has two sound-front condominium communities attached to its name, The Knolls at Fox Hill and The Bluffs. Both properties share amenities including, golf, an Olympic size pool, tennis and a private beach. The well-known Giorgio's Restaurant is also on the property. At the Bluffs, the 2 bedroom, 2 bath waterfront units have sky-rocketed in price over the past few years. The same units I showed myself as an agent in the 90s, in the $150,000 range, are now selling for anywhere from $400-600 thousand. At this point the units are all resales or private rentals. The units offer spectacular sunset views of the LI Sound, and spa style Jacuzzis and fireplaces are included in all.

The Numbers:

Acres and acres of grapes on the North Fork. Martha Clara Vineyard in North Jamesport is one of the largest vineyards on the forks. Boasting 200 acres, it is rivaled in land space only by Peconic Bay Vineyard. Half of the land has been planted with a variety of European grapes on what were once polo fields. The vineyard's many barns and out buildings have been restored and renovated. Many may remember the retail shop located in the building, Chicks Farmstand. The owners, the Entenmann family of Entenmann Cakes fame, once ran the property as a thoroughbred race horse farm. They host many events at the vineyard and can accommodate as many as 1000 guests.

CORRECTION

An error appeared in our column "Real Estates" last week. We erroneously reported that the 82-acre Galluccio Family Wineries on the North Fork were for sale. They had been for sale earlier in the year for $7.5 million, but, according to Vince Galluccio, have now been withdrawn from the market.

STOP FOR TURTLES From late spring through the fall, our indigenous turtles roam their now fragmented environment. As they wander out onto the roadways, they are often struck by speeding and unexpected motorists. These precious turtles are slow moving and can be easily avoided. When frightened, they withdraw into their shells and resemble an elliptical stone in the road. Please drive with care and help a turtle cross the road.
